NINA TOTENBERG

Nina Totenberg is National Public Radio's award-winning legal affairs correspondent. Her reports air regularly on NPR's critically-acclaimed newsmagazines "ALL THINGS CONSIDERED," "MORNING EDITION," and "WEEKEND EDITION."

Nina Totenberg's coverage of the Supreme Court and of legal affairs in general has won her widespread recognition. She has been honored six times by the American Bar Association for her coverage and has received the 1987 Media Merit Award from the Association of Trial Lawyers of America for continued excellence in legal reporting. Totenberg also won the coveted Sidney Hillman Foundation Award, the Headliner Award, and the Armstrong Award for a series on voting rights in the South.

A frequent contributor to major newspaper and periodicals, she has published articles in "THE NEW YORK TIMES," "THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR," "PARADE," "THE NEW YORKER," and others. She is a frequent speaker at bar associations and law schools.

Before joining NPR in 1975, Totenberg served as Washington editor of "NEW TIMES MAGAZINE." Before that she was the legal affairs correspondent for the "NATIONAL OBSERVER." At the "NATIONAL OBSERVER," Totenberg's much-quoted profile of J. Edgar Hoover prompted the late director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation to pressure the publication to fire her. The Observer printed Hoover's letter and stood by its reporter.

Dean Norman Redlich, New York University, said, "As someone who has taught constitutional law for 27 years, I find that, in addition to explaining complex constitutional issues clearly for law audiences, Totenberg also manages to provide insights that are accurate and useful."

U.S. Department of Justice Solicitor General Rex E. Lee adds, "Nina Totenberg is a good journalist because she understands not only her profession but also mine. I have been impressed with her command of basic constitutional principles. She is a person of high professional and ethical standards — whom I trust implicitly."
