

War office June 7. 1844

Dear Mr. Clarendon,

Mr. Arnold has set his heart on visiting Spain across the Pyrenees.
His chief object, I believe, is to obtain geographical information for his History of Rome. With that view he wishes to examine the scene of Puleia (Cesar's) great campaign against Pompey's lieutenants, - the country near Lerida, de - He wants very much to know whether the journey is a safe

one. My own impression from some things which I have heard you mention is that it is very much otherwise, and that,

at all events, the doctor will do well to have his ~~arms~~ ^{arms} behind.
If you could furnish any suggestion it would be most ~~thankfully~~ received.

Ever yours

W. Macaulay
