3.1 Item 1: A Photographic Negative, by [Pos. Gilbert Stuart McClintock, [ca. mid-late nineteenth-early twentieth century], of a Payment Order from the [Count of Provence, Louis Stanislas Xavier, \[Future King Louis XVIII of France\]](#) to Monsieur Denis-Pierre-Jean Papillon de la Ferté for Sieur Dupont [French Language], 1777/1778 June 20.

Type of Material: Photographic Negative

Title: Au S. Dupont p^r Remboursement et Indemnité w/ 400 (livres) (To Sr. Dupont for Reimbursement and Compensation; 400 (French pounds))

Description: The following is a photographic negative image, likely by Gilbert Stuart McClintock, from the mid-late nineteenth to early twentieth century. The original item, 2.7, is found in Subseries I: Foreign Rulers 1549-1906, (Removed to Black Box #1). It is an order from the Count of Provence, Louis Stanislas Xavier, \(future King Louis XVIII\) to M. Denis-Pierre-Jean Papillon de la Ferté, the Intendant of the Menus-Plaisirs du Roi (the Steward of Lesser Pleasures for the King) and the Count of Provence's Treasurer General, on June 20, 1778, from the Palace of Versailles. According to this document, Pierre Samuel du Pont de Nemours, the “former hunting inspector”, was to be paid an outstanding debt of 400 [French] pounds from the funds of the Treasury General. It appears that this was payment for a hunting expedition that took place in “Brunoi” (likely referring to a forest in Brunoy, France) in September, 1777.

The Count of Provence frequently hunted in the Forest of Sénart that extended into parts of Brunoy. The Count of Provence also purchased “le Petit Chateau” \(The Little Castle\) of Brunoy in 1774. This document was countersigned by “Cromot” (likely referring to Jules-David Cromot Fougy Baron du Bourg, 1725-1786, Governor of Brunoy and Superintendent of Finances to the Count of Provence). This document is very similar to a debt repayment order for M. de la Châtre, a repayment order for Sieur Cognary, and a repayment order for Sr. Jean Francois T. Chalgrin. The Count of Provence was known to have a significant amount of debt that his brother, King Louis XVI, helped pay off. In 1774, following the death of Stanislas Xavier’s grandfather Louis XV, Stanislas’ elder brother Dauphin Louis August ascended to the throne as Louis XVI, thus earning Stanislas the title of Monsieur, the eldest brother of the King. Stanislas uses this title when officiating the document.

Description: The following is a photographic negative image, likely by Gilbert Stuart McClintock, from the mid-late nineteenth to early twentieth century. The original item, 9.96a, is found in Subseries I: Presidents of the United States, 1777-1959. The item is a letter dated December 1, 1938, and written by Franklin Dwight Roosevelt, the 32nd president of the United States, to Julian Parks Boyd, a prominent professor of history at Princeton. In the letter, Roosevelt is writing in regard to an invitation to a luncheon so they may discuss plans for a library that would become the Roosevelt Library at Hyde Park. This item is connected to Item 96, as this is the letter with Roosevelt's signature that Boyd is giving to McClintock's collection, as well as holds historical significance regarding the legacy of Franklin D. Roosevelt, as referenced in Item 96: "This is the letter that initiated the FDR library at Hyde Park. He already had his 'general plan'-in detail-but he wanted it to look as if the group he assembled had advised & promoted it."

The White House

Washington

Warm Springs, Georgia

December 1 1938

My dear Mr. Boyd:

It would give me great pleasure if you could come to luncheon with me at the White House on Saturday, December tenth. I am asking a small group of people from different parts of the country to come together to discuss with me a matter which lies very close to my heart and on which I would like to take some definite action in the very near future.

Because I could greatly value your advice on the right way to work out the plan I have in mind and because I know of your deep interest, not only in the preservation of historical source material but also in your current interest in current affairs of government, I hope very much that you will be able to lunch with me that day at one o'clock at the White House.

I am enclosing a short and very sketchy memorandum which I hope you will be thinking over.

This necessarily must remain a matter to be kept in the strictest confidence, because I think it would be a pity if there were any intimations relating to the general plan before I have something definite to go on.

My sincere regards,

Faithfully yours,

3.3 Item 3: A Photographic Negative Image, by [Pos. Gilbert Stuart McClintock, [ca. mid-late nineteenth-early twentieth century], of a Royal Decree by King Ferdinand I [Future Holy Roman Emperor] [Czech Language], 1549 April 3

Description: The following is a photographic negative image, likely by Gilbert Stuart McClintock, from the mid-late nineteenth to early twentieth century. The original item, 2.16. Item 16 (removed to Black Box #1), is found in Subseries I: Foreign Rulers 1549-1906. It was a letter from Ferdinand I, Holy Roman Emperor, 1503-1564 to the leaders of the city of České Budějovice in what is currently the South Bohemian Region of Czechia dated April 3, 1549. This decree was created to clarify the duties of the Court of Appeals and to address complaints that there were many delays in the judicial process. Under Ferdinand's signature is a note specifying a Chancellor named Henricus Purgravi, who may have had a part in transcribing or addressing the decree. Ferdinand was the younger brother of Charles V, Holy Roman Emperor and inherited many lands, such as the Habsburg land of Austria. Ferdinand was a devout Catholic and struggled with the Protestant Reformation, though he played a key part in the Peace of Augsburg, which allowed rulers to choose their country's religion. Ferdinand often had skirmishes with the Ottoman Empire under Suleiman the Magnificent, who invaded Hungary, though Ferdinand was able to ward them off. In 1556, Charles V abdicated his position and Ferdinand became Holy Roman Emperor in 1558 and made great strides to maintain stability in Europe. In 1549, when this letter was written, Ferdinand was trying to enforce the Augsburg Interim, which was a temporary religious decree issued by Charles V to maintain Catholic dominance while still trying to appease Protestants, though it was very unpopular and led to increased resistance.

Ferdinand, by God's grace, King of the Romans, Hungarians, Czechs, etc. king, Child of Spain, Archduke of Austria and Margrave of Moravia, etc.

Our dear loyal subjects, we have received reports that many of you are not receiving assistance with the judgements that are being made against you, but rather are experiencing delays, which is, if it were so, to our considerable astonishment and against our wishes. We do not wish to allow this [to continue], and therefore we command you, instructing that anyone who has any judgement from our council regarding appeals should be assisted without delay, and that no one should be obstructed And just as the bailiff himself judges up to five hundred Czech groschen, and appeals go from the bailiff before you. We leave this in place, unless someone wishes to stop at your judgement, then they should be able and have the power to appeal before our royal person and at our council, especially at the Prague Castle, as mentioned above, to take appeals and objections, which should be permitted to everyone by you. And whoever wishes to take an appeal before us as now announced in any manner, from this day forward, shall not be obliged to submit and arrange for the appeal more than two hundred Czech groschen until our further order regarding this. Furthermore, you shall not send any acts that arise in any appeal before they have been read to the parties involved and sealed in their presence, so that no further claims come to us regarding this matter. Therefore, you shall oversee all of the above with diligence, ensuring that everything is conducted properly at all times and that nothing is neglected, otherwise, it shall not be done otherwise.

Given at Our castle in Prague on Wednesday after the Sunday of Lent in the year etc. XLVIII^o and in the nineteenth year of our Roman kingdom and the thirteenth year of Ferdinand's reign.

Description: The following is a photographic negative image, likely by Gilbert Stuart McClintock, from the mid-late nineteenth to early twentieth century. The original item, 4.44, is from Subseries III: Foreign Literary Authors, 1777-1915. The item is a letter written by French Enlightenment writer, historian, and philosopher, François-Marie Arouet, known more commonly as Voltaire, to an unknown recipient. In the letter, Voltaire begins by conducting matters of business investments with the recipient. Voltaire then transitions to personal matters, where he discusses the declining health of his aunt, and his admiration for the doctor he met on his visit. In light pencil, a different handwriting: “Very valuable because Voltaire rarely signed his name, generally only V as in this letter.” Other handwriting samples and media can be found at the Voltaire Foundation's website.

Description: The following is a photographic negative image, likely by Gilbert Stuart McClintock, from the mid-late nineteenth to early twentieth century. The original item, 12.68. Item 28, (removed to black box #1), is found in Subseries I: General, 1758-1841 of Series V: Wilkes-Barre, Wyoming Valley, Luzerne County, 1758-1841. The original item was a certificate, by Thomas Mifflin, who during the 1790s, presided over the committee writing Pennsylvania's state constitution. He became Pennsylvania's first governor in 1790 and left the role in 1799, the year prior to his death. Alexander Dallas was named Secretary of the Commonwealth by Mifflin. He held the post from 1791 to 1801. Civil honors came to Matthias Hollenback (1752-1829). His first commission in civil life was as justice of the Peace, signed by Benjamin Franklin, May 11, 1787, and under the state constitution, he was commissioned by Gov. Mifflin as Associate judge, August 17, 1791; a position which he filled with honor and esteem for 38 years. The military title of "Colonel" came from his rank in the peace-time Militia. Thus, this is a "certificate showing that Matthias Hollenback of Luzerne County was commissioned Lieutenant Colonel in the 3rd Regiment of the Luzerne brigade of the militia of Pennsylvania, August 17, 1793."

Item 41 is found in Subseries IV: Correspondence, General, 1777-1982, bulk 19th century. This is a letter from John Houston to Joseph Hedges on April 11, 1846. During this letter, Houston says it's his pleasure to go through with Hedges' requests and that he deserves something for it. The creator of this letter, John Houston, was born in Delaware in 1814. He served as a Justice of the Delaware Superior Court and was a U.S. Representative from Delaware. Houston attended the Peace Conference of 1861, which was held in Washington, D.C., in an effort to devise means to prevent the impending Civil War. Joseph Hedges was a bookkeeper and autograph collector based in Philadelphia, PA. Hedges was likely requesting a signature from Houston for his collection, which Houston complied with.

Description: The following is a photographic negative image, likely by Gilbert Stuart McClintock, from the mid-late nineteenth to early twentieth century. The original items 9.61-9.63 are found in Subseries I: Presidents of the United States, 1777-1959. The letter dated February 26, 1860, written by Andrew Johnson, the 17th president of the United States, to a recipient addressed as "Friend Larry." In the letter, Johnson is writing about the recent applicants from Hawkins County. He states that he will share no comment on the recent letter by a Mr. Edmond, for he believes his recipient will know better what to do with their applications. The reason or situation for their applications is not addressed and we do not have the Edmond letter to reference. The photograph depicts Andrew Johnson, the 17th president of the United States, seated on a high back chair with a curtain draped behind him. He is wearing a black, three piece suit with a white undershirt. His hair is brushed to the right side of his head and back. The photograph may have been taken by Mathew Brady, as inferred by a comparison with another photograph found digitized on Invaluable and Swann auction houses' websites. The photographer's date has been estimated by comparison with the same item.

Description: The following is a photographic negative image, likely by Gilbert Stuart McClintock, from the mid-late nineteenth to early twentieth century. The original item, 2.55. Item 55 is found in Subseries II: Titled Figures, 1720-1949. This is a letter written by Isaac Barre to “My Lord,” recommending a relation, Lieutenant Isaac Phipps, for consideration for “full pay.” The letter indicates that Barre has served under the recipient in North America, revealing that the recipient is Shelburne, William Petty, Earl of Shelburne, 1737-1805, who had been Barre’s commander in the Quebec Campaign during the Seven Years’ War and was well known in later years as Barre’s political patron. An approximate date can be determined based on the contents of the letter. Lord Bristol is noted as having made promises to Isaac Phipps which were not kept due to his resignation from office. Hervey, George William, Earl of Bristol, 1721-1775 served as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland from October 1766 to August 1767 when he resigned. Shelburne was then serving as Secretary of State for the Southern Department, a position which he held until October 1768. This dates the letter approximately to the fall of 1767, most specifically December 1767 due to the back of the letter having the abbreviation “Decem.”. The creator of this letter, Isaac Barre, was an Anglo-Irish soldier and politician born in Dublin in 1726. His parents were Huguenot refugees who escaped to Ireland. Barre attended Trinity College and graduated with a Bachelors of Arts degree. After graduating he joined the British Army and fought during the Seven Years’ War. Following his military career, Barre became heavily involved in politics.

Description: The following is a photographic negative image, likely by Gilbert Stuart McClintock, from the mid-late nineteenth to early twentieth century. The original item, 2.20. Item 20, is found in Subseries I: Foreign Rulers 1549-1906. The letter from Catherine, the Great, 1729-1796 is to an unknown person dated February 3, 1791. The letter in Cyrillic seems to have been sent in response to “good wishes” Catherine received from the recipient regarding the “change of the year,” likely the New Year, which was celebrated on January 14th, according to the Orthodox calendar. Catherine the Great prays that the recipient have undisturbed and constant love in their “princely house”. This may suggest that the recipient was a Russian noble of some variety. Catherine the Great presided over the Russian Enlightenment after overthrowing her husband Peter III. Catherine led a large-scale renaissance of culture and science in Russia, leading to Russia being recognized as one of Europe’s Great Powers. When this letter was written, Russia was battling Turkey over the Black Sea region in the Russo-Turkish War \(1787-1792\) while also fighting back Sweden’s invasion of the Baltic lands under King Gustav III during the Russo-Swedish War \(1788-1790\). This ended with the Treaty of Värälä, which was signed in August, 1790. Domestically, social tensions were rising due to the military focus and slowing of modernization reforms, leading to a strain on resources. This letter was likely sent to one of the many nobles appointed by Catherine.

Description: The following is a photographic negative image, likely by Gilbert Stuart McClintock, from the mid-late nineteenth to early twentieth century. The original item, 2.43. Item 43, [Removed to Legal Box #1], and 2.45. Item 45, both found in Subseries II: Titled Figures, 1720-1949. The following item is a letter from Chevalier Anne-César de la Luzerne, Ambassador of France, to John Hancock, Governor of Massachusetts, on January 10, 1783. The letter acknowledges the joy that the Commonwealth of Massachusetts expressed towards the birth of Louis-Joseph-Xavier, Dauphin of France by Marie Antionette. As dauphin, Louis-Joseph was the heir-apparent of France and was first in line for the succession of the throne until he died in 1789. He was born in October 1781, almost two years prior to this letter. This delay in congratulations was likely due to the American Revolution, which ended in February, 1783. This letter also mentions that the King of France, Louis XVI, will always take particular interest in the prosperity of Massachusetts. This serves as a recognition of the state's independence from Britain. The King's special interest in Massachusetts may be because of the Boston Massacre, which led to the Boston Tea Party, leading to Britain's Intolerable Acts, leading to the American Revolution. Furthermore, several key battles took place there, such as the Battles of Lexington and Concord and the Battle of Bunker Hill. Finally, when the Declaration of Independence was signed, John Hancock, representing Massachusetts, was the first to sign. Luzerne became the French minister to the United States in 1779 and returned to France in 1784. He was a staunch supporter of the American Revolution and greatly influenced the development of the new government in Philadelphia. A second document describes Luzerne as a French minister living in Philadelphia during the American Revolution. This second document mentions a celebration of the birth of the Dauphin, possibly referring to the open-air pavilion in Philadelphia that was commissioned in 1782 by Anne-Cesar de la Luzerne to host a party for the birth of the Dauphin.

The heraldic item of Chevalier Anne-César de la Luzerne, is created on an unknown date. The document contains the description of a "blue [background] with an affixed cross of gold filled with five shells of gules." Luzerne became the French minister to the United States in 1779 and returned to France in 1784. He was a staunch supporter of the American Revolution and greatly influenced the development of the new government in Philadelphia.

3.14 Item 14: A Photographic Negative Image, by [Pos. Gilbert Stuart McClintock, [ca. mid-late nineteenth-early twentieth century], of a Royal Decree from King Charles I, 1646 June 8

Type of Material: Photographic Negative

Title: N/A

Description: The following is a photographic negative image, likely by Gilbert Stuart McClintock, from the mid-late nineteenth to early twentieth century. The original item, 2.23. Item 23 (removed to Legal Box #1), is found in Subseries I: Foreign Rulers 1549-1906. This royal decree was written by King Charles I, King of England, Ireland, and Scotland, to all military officers and coxswains on June 8, 1646, from Newcastle (likely referring to Newcastle Gaol). The decree was created to prevent any military officers from obstructing the passage of Lieutenant Colonel Clarke (possibly in charge of nine companies of Foot in 1651), his two servants, and three horses. It is possible that Lieutenant Colonel Clarke participated in the English Civil War, carrying an important message of some variety. In 1642, Charles I and the Royalists began to fight the revolutionary Parliamentarians of England and Scotland. In 1645, he was defeated by the Parliamentary New Model Army. He retreated from the battle and surrendered to a Scottish force and was taken by the Long Parliament. In April 1646 he escaped imprisonment, but was shortly recaptured by the Scottish Presbyterian Army, who sold him to the English Parliament in January 1647. This decree was issued during his captivity in Newcastle with the Scottish Presbyterian Army, and may have been the beginning of another escape attempt. It appears that at this period of the war, he still had some followers and power, as he was able to threaten the officers that if they didn't let Clarke pass, they would be answerable to the highest perils. This document is signed by the Earl of Lanark, William Hamilton. The Earl of Lanark acted as the Secretary of State for Scotland and met with King Charles I at Newcastle in 1646 to negotiate the adoption of Presbyterianism. In 1649, a Lieutenant-Colonel Clarke was imprisoned at Newgate Prison for "being in arms against Parliament" and attempting war. He was later released for good behavior.

3.15 Item 15:A Photographic Negative Image, by [Pos. Gilbert Stuart McClintock, [ca. mid-late nineteenth-early twentieth century], of a Letter from Benjamin Franklin to Lord Butler, 1787 April 4

Type of Material: Photographic Negative

Title:

Description: The following is a photographic negative image, likely by Gilbert Stuart McClintock, from the mid-late nineteenth to early twentieth century. The original item, 12.95 Item 55 (removed to legal size box #1), is found in Series V: Manuscripts concerning the early history of Wilkes-Barre, Luzerne County, Wyoming Valley, 1758-1841. In the letter, Franklin writes to Butler to demonstrate the petitions of the settlers residing in the valley, particularly those of Connecticut, who have requested the assembly to view their previous claims they were forcibly removed from in order to be reinstated in them. Franklin writes with a positive view of the petitions, stating that to aid these people would be not only a good demonstration of the government's power and honor but also the principles of the Constitution.

This is referencing the various petitions by Connecticut settlers to the Pennsylvania assembly following the Decree of Trenton's decision of jurisdiction and following abuse under Alexander Patterson. The Decree of Trenton granted the rights of jurisdiction to Pennsylvania following a three part war called the Yankee Pennamite Wars. These conflicts waged between Connecticut and Pennsylvania were an attempt to resolve a dispute over the land in the upper regions of what is now Pennsylvania after King Charles II granted the land twice, once to Connecticut in 1662, and again to William Penn as he founded Pennsylvania in 1681. While the Decree of Trenton gave Pennsylvania the right to soil, it did not give them the right to title. Yet, under the command of the Pennsylvania Assembly and Patterson, Pennsylvania would forcibly remove "one-hundred and fifty" Connecticut families from their homes. They forced the families to "find their way through the wilderness of the Lackawaxen to the Delaware Valley, a distance of about eighty miles,” without supplies or clothing to sustain them (Gnichtel, The Trenton Decree of 1782). The violence and brutality levied by Patterson’s troops was so severe that it drew attention from neighboring states, and condemnation on the governing bodies of Pennsylvania. That critique ultimately led the Pennsylvania Assembly to remove Patterson from his position within the valley around July 1784, replacing him with colonel John Armstrong.

Description: The following is a photographic negative image, likely by Gilbert Stuart McClintock, from the mid-late nineteenth to early twentieth century. The original item, 10.31 Item 31, is found in Subseries III: Butler Correspondence, 1759-1854. The letter written by John Durkee to Zebulon Butler, a lieutenant colonel during the American Revolutionary War. In the letter, Durkee writes that he sent word to Captain Simon Spalding’s company by Lieutenant Daniel Gore, that all soldiers with familial connections to their post are to remain stationed where they are for the time. It is likely that this is referring to the Wyoming post that Butler has been positioned at from items ranging from item 10.15 to 10.20. Durkee writes that Butler can be the best to judge which parties should stay back while presumably sending along other parties. Durkee continues to write, asking Butler to collect the rents due on his properties in the region and supply his sister with the provisions and produce that Butler believes will sustain her. He concludes by mentioning that General Uriah Parsons has been away from camp for a while, but that he expects him back soon, just as he expects Butler to be along in his own time.

Description: The following is a photographic negative image, likely by Gilbert Stuart McClintock, from the mid-late nineteenth to early twentieth century. The original item, 4.10 Item 10, is found in Subseries III: Foreign Literary Authors, 1777-1915. In the letter, Dickens excuses his absence, having been away in the countryside. He goes on to ask for time on a possible project, and conducts business with Maclise. The end of the letter appears to be Maclise asking Dickens' opinion or comment on an autobiography, which he refutes without seeing further work.

The first is a letter from William Dean Howells to Thomas Allibone Janvier on February 3, 1892. During this letter Howells is letting Janvier know that his book is the correct length and that he is ready to see it after publication. The creator of this letter, William Howells, was born in Ohio in 1837. He was a realist novelist, playwright, literary critic, and was nicknamed "The Dean of American Letters" while also being known for his tenure as editor of a magazine. In 1904 Howells was one of the first seven people who were chosen for membership in the American Academy of Arts and Letters. The recipient of this letter, Thomas Janvier, was born in Philadelphia and was a story writer and historian. Janvier spent time in New York, New Mexico, Mexico, and Colorado where he would find much of his inspiration for his writings. The second is a letter from William Dean Howells to Thomas Allibone Janvier on April 12, 1892. During this letter Howells is giving Janvier suggestions for corrections that should be made in his story. The creator of this letter, William Howells, was born in Ohio in 1837. My dear Janvier:

Your story is of a very good length, now and I am sure the breadth and thickness will be all right. I shall be glad to see it.

I am sorry for the inappropriate. Lord, why should we be so worried on the way!

Yours ever

My dear Janvier:

The story is delightful, but there are two places where it is rather too high-kicking. I have marked with suggestions the first (su[b]j[ect]s 231); the second (su[b]j[ect]s238) aboard the "ostentation of the terrapin" parodies the "ostentations of the deserts" and would wound all Catholic readers. I knew it will be work to give it, but be a good boy and do it.

3.20 Item 20: A Photographic Negative Image, by [Pos. Gilbert Stuart McClintock, [ca. mid-late nineteenth-early twentieth century], of a Signed Military Promotion Decree by King George II, 1735/6 January 20

Type of Material: Photographic Negative

Title: N/A

#1) is found in Subseries I: Foreign Rulers 1549-1906. The royal decree is written by King George II to James Cuningham Esq. on January 20, 1735/6 from St. James's Palace, London. The decree acknowledges the promotion of James Cuningham Esq. to the rank of Major and his assignment as a captain in charge of a company within the Regiment of Foot. James Cuningham Esq. is under the command of Brigadier General, John Middleton Esq. The authors charge James Cuningham Esq. to maintain order and discipline within the ranks while obeying and executing the orders of his superiors. This document was countersigned by "Harrington," possibly referring to William Stanhope, the 1st Earl of Harrington (referred to as Baron Harrington at the time this document was written). This document was submitted to the Secretary at War by R. Arnold (possibly referring to the Deputy Secretary at War, Arnold, Richard, 1682-1742) and submitted to the Commissary General 1735/1736 January 20 by George Huxley. Signed by King George II of Great Britain as "George R" with the "R" referring to "Rex" (King). The document contains a round official stamp, red-orange in color, while the back of the document contains a postage stamp with the letters "GR" surrounding a crown and "220" in the top right corner. This document appears to be a standard military promotion and appointment certificate template with blank spaces to allow for specific details to be added. The specifics appear to be underlined and in a different ink than the rest of the certificate. Although signed and authorized by King George II of Great Britain, this certificate was likely filled out and issued by "Harrington" (likely referring to Baron Harrington). James Cuningham may have been commissioned in the King's 10th Regiment of Foot, 1710 January 12.

Description: The following is a photographic negative image, likely by Gilbert Stuart McClintock, from the mid-late nineteenth to early twentieth century. The original item, 2.10 Item 10 (Removed to Black Box #1), is found in Subseries I: Foreign Rulers, 1549 - 1949. The following is a printed summons signed by Napoleon Bonaparte \(future Napoleon I\) to the President of the Canton of Abbeville-Sud granting total policing authority of the local area for an assembly that was set to meet on 10 Frimaire of the year XII of the French Republic (1803 December 2). This document was signed in Saint-Cloud, France, (likely at the Château de Saint-Cloud) on Fructidor 15 of the year XI (September 2, 1803). The “15” was difficult to discern, but a similar document led us to the conclusion that it was “15.” The First Inspector of the Police Force and the General in charge of the 15th military division had been informed of this and were to be on stand-by to assist the canton’s forces if need be. It is noted that Napoleon passed through Abbeville for the first time in 1803, and the First Consul often spent time in Abbeville to prepare for their expedition

against the United Kingdom. This took place leading up to the War of the Third Coalition and the beginning of the Napoleonic Wars. This document uses the months of the French Republican calendar and was countersigned by Jean-Antoine Chaptel and Hugues-Bernard Maret. This document was sealed with an early version of the official Great Seal of France. Napoleon's signature in this document matches his signatures before he became Emperor of France.
