Economics Notes, in manila envelope, postmarked July 1, 1983, containing the notes and other items

Mailer's notes for a lecture on economics are contained on eight index cards, four small, and four large (5" x 8"). They are written in both pencil and pen, probably at different times, and are difficult to read. One section deals with the opposition of piety and sacrilege in politics, a good example of Mailer's deep and abiding attention to cultural dualities.

Also included: A large, folded map of Provincetown and outer Cape Cod, and a page torn from a book about the mass murderer Tony Costa showing where he buried his victims. Mailer had planned to write about Costa, but did not focus specifically on him in the novel he published about another string of Cape Cod murders, Tough Guys Don't Dance. It was written in the summer of 1984 (published by Random House in October 1984), the year that many of these documents are dated.

An article about Mailer and feminism from The Daily Pennsylvanian, February 15, 1983, a publication of the Univ. of Pennsylvania. Mailer lectured there several times after he was invited by Robert F. Lucid, his close friend and erstwhile biographer.

An envelope and correspondence from the Esalen Institute, May 17, 1984.

A love note to "Sweet Daddy Dynamite," a nickname his wife Norris gave him. Enclosed are three photos of him and Norris during the filming of Ragtime in London, October, 1984. Both played roles in this film, directed by Milos Forman.

A four-page typed document (numbered 2-5, p. 1 missing), dealing with the thoughts of Galileo as he gazes at the Moon and the Milky Way through his telescope. It seems to have been written by Richard Goodwin, as part of his play about Galileo, which Mailer discussed with him. The pencil notes and marks on these pages appear to have been made by Mailer..

(Although the stage is dim, we can distinguish the figure of Galileo now seated to the right of the telescope. His chair, like those often seen in elementary schools, has an arm extending from its frame which widens to present a writing surface to the right hand of the occupant. The low seat allows Galileo a comfortable position from which to make his observations. As the lights diminish toward total darkness, we become aware -- part sight, part intuition -- that Galileo, his chair and telescope are revolving. There is an instant of total blackness, before a cone of light reveals Galileo seated, facing the audience, looking through a telescope, now pointed toward the theatre ceiling, where there is projected an image of the night sky -- as if the entire theatre had been turned into a planetarium. To the limit of technical possibility, the image will change, giving prominence to the successive objects of his observation.

Galileo: First? (pauses - A full moon is prominent in the night sky.) The moon. Full-bottomed Eve: grafted by God as comfort to the fugitive earth. So ripe, tonight. So swollen with sweet invitation. Do you mock the men you madden with unconsummated desire? I wonder. Let me see if I can peek beneath the hem of your borrowed radiance. (A brief pause as Galileo continues to look through the telescope, and then sits back in his chair.)

React to the play

→ The dark spots. They are no mystery at all; only the cratered shadows of erupted rock. I have seen the valley of the Arno ^{just} so enshrouded while the Tuscan hills still flamed with sun. (begins to laugh.) That marbled sphere, that perfect crystal form of our philosophy, proves more erupt and fissured than our ravaged earth: itself no longer to be thought corrupt
-- a bastard outcast, amid spheres of celestial purity... but ^{no,} in the company of ^{the} celestial bodies, rivaling ^{our earth may rival} all the rest in splendour and in majesty, equal subject to the same decrees which govern all the natural universe.

So, Aristotle, after two thousand years, in a single night -- in one hour of one single night -- I have torn the keystone from the arch. (In a commanding tone directed at the darkness behind him.) Paper! Pen! Quickly! I must publish my discoveries immediately. These observations ^{will} must soon occur to someone else.

Next? (pause) The milky way. That baffling Mediterranean of light, which seems a ^{that that} rupturing gulf in the dark roof of the world. (Looks intently.) It is .. they are .. Stars! Hundreds! No, thousands! Tens of thousands! So closely packed that the eye could not distinguish. With one new world Columbus amazed all the thrones of Europe. I will bring them a million.

(Picks up the pen which, along with some blank paper, is on the writing arm of his chair -- although we did not see them brought.)

How shall I title my discoveries? What word did Filippo use... about the geometry of my falling pen? "A message". And so is this. (Galileo leans over and starts to write.) A Message from the Stars. (Galileo pauses, looks up, musingly): Moon, milky way, and, yes, a planet. I need a planet to close the angle of this survey. (Reaches for the telescope, and looking through the eyepiece, moves it to scan the heavens.) Jupiter. The House of Jupiter ascends. (We see projected the face of Jupiter, a compound of red vortices made familiar to us by our rockets of exploration. On both sides of the planet there are, in total, four "moons".) One... Two... No, four; (exuberantly). Four planets, never before seen, captive to Jupiter as moon to earth. (Removes his eye from the telescope.) By right of discovery, I can name them (pauses) to honour the ruling house of Florence. From this night, for all eternity, they are to be known as the Stars of Medici. (pauses, begins to smile.) If I have fashioned them a place in the heavens, surely ^{the Medici} they can find one at their court for me.

(Bends over paper and resumes writing, speaking aloud): Accept then, most clement prince, this gentle glory reserved by the stars for you.

(Galileo is still, as he continues writing. In the silence we hear Polissena, as she strums the lute.)

All things fall and are built again,

And those that build them are gay.

The tires that wind the world must part,

And be rewoven with a singing heart.

(There is silence. Galileo puts down his pen and looks directly toward the audience): I have seen more and further this night than all the sons of Adam. (Crosses himself.) (The stage darkens.)

Dear Norman,

Am I a totalitarian, if once again I shall mention Space Bridge Channel? We are, at least here, coming full speed ahead to connect five Continents together in June thru Kid's Vision of our Future. I hope by this very naive and 'simple' Act we open our eyes on our Complexity, thus avoiding one-dimensional solutions to problems' we are facing right now.

Once again I want to thank you for that initial act - my letter to the World Future Society - we've done in Leningrad on the March 29th if you'll find some ways to be in touch with this Event and help them to make it happen, it will be that next step into the Future we initiated a month ago.

Hope to see you soon. Love. Joseph Goldin

The Women-Hater

Norman Mailer on the Prime Responsibility of a Woman:

"The prime responsibility of a woman probably is to be on earth long enough to find the best mate for herself and conceive children who will improve the species."

Norman Mailer on Feminists:

They are "a squadron of enraged amazons, an honorguard of revolutionary vaginas" and/or "stupid bitches."

Kate Millet on Norman Mailer:

"In Mailer's work the sexual animus behind reactionary attitude erupts into open hostility."

"When a novelist is obsessed with certain traits of behavior, his characters tend to repeat themselves from one book to the next."

From The Naked and the Dead, by Norman Mailer:

"He must subdue her, absorb her, rip her apart and consume her. . . [thinking] 'I'll take you apart, I'll eat you, oh, I'll make you mine, you bitch. . .'"

From An American Dream, by Norman Mailer:

"I jammed up her ass and came as if I'd been flung across the room. She let out a cry of rage . . . [a minute or two later] 'Mr. Rojack,' she said . . . 'I do not know why you have trouble with your wife. You are absolutely a genius, Mr. Rojack.'"

From Time of Her Time, by Norman Mailer:

"I turned her over suddenly on her belly, my avenger wild with the mania of the madman, and giving her no chance, holding her prone against the mattress with the strength of my weight, I drove into the seat of all stubbornness . . . and I wounded her, I knew it, she thrashed beneath me like a trapped little animal . . . [a few minutes later] 'Was it good for you too?' she whispered. . ."

Norman Mailer to Mike Wallace on Mailer's stabbing of his second wife:

"Yes," he chuckled, 'I got into quite a scrape Saturday night.'"

Pointing out the subtle ways in which sexism permeates so many aspects of day-to-day existence is often an activity fraught with frustration. It seems many people simply will not get past their denial phases. In fact, they say, are not meant as: "it was only a joke," or "you'll gain about anything," or "You're making a mountain out of a molehill."

Well, Norman Mailer is no molehill. Nor is he subtle. Misogynist literature, according to Kate Millet, is "the primary vehicle of masculine hostility" toward women. I doubt misogyny could be better represented than it is in the person and works of Norman Mailer.

"Misogyny Frsonified" has been invited to spend a week here at the University, in March. Mailer will be the first Papas College House Visiting Fellow. He was chosen by the collective of College House Masters — through no special process, but by virtue of his association with Robert Lucid. Lucid, aster of Hill House, is friendly with Mailer and is currently writing Mailer's biography. All of the other College House Masters are men. A coincidence? I think not.

Mailer's invitation is but another example of institutionalized sexism. College House Programs Coordinator Randy Helm is very pleased about Mailer's upcoming visit. Helm readily admits that Mailer is "a controversial figure," but "I think it's more beneficial to have someone you disagree with than someone you agree with 100 percent," he said.

I could not agree more with Helm. I merely wish to bring to light the fact that hostility and hatred toward women are being treated as viable points of view here.

This is not a new phenomenon. The denial stage previously mentioned is really no stage at all. People choose not to recognize an act as sexist because sexism itself is so ingrained in their attitudes that they cannot see it. Norman Mailer's invitation to the University is a gesture that epitomizes the University's lack of regard for women. It is a mountainous insult.

Cape Cod National Seashore

1 SALT POND VISITOR CENTER — This is a good place to start one's visit to the National Seashore. At the Visitor Center are a table top map of the Cape; pamphlets, books and trail guides; and a brief introductory film. The facilities of this area offer illustrated lectures, raft demonstrations, nature trails, bird walks, picnic areas, and a small museum with dioramas showing the history and geology of the Cape. A unique feature of this area is the Buttonbush Trail for the Blind, a quarter-mile trail with informative plaques in both large type and Braille. This is also the beginning of the 1 mile Nauset Marsh Trail and a bicycle route (shown on the Eastham map).

2 FORT HILL — This promontory, offering a beautiful sunrise vista, is located at the end of Fort Hill Road. A trail begins near the Penniman House and proceeds along the Nauset Marsh, a favorite for bird watchers and nature photographers. Farther along is Skiff Hill, where there is an interpretive shelter and a beautiful view of the area. From here a boardwalk trail leads into the Red Maple Swamp, a curious jungle-like melange of vegetation. (The Fort Hill Trail is shown on the Eastham map.)

4 NAUSET LIGHT HOUSE AND BEACH — This is one of the Cape's historic old light houses, now fully automated. For more about the lighthouse, see the Eastham "Points of Interest" in this atlas and guide book). Nauset Beach offers facilities for visitors, including lifeguards on duty.

5 MARCONI STATION AREA — En route to the Marconi Station is the Cape Cod National Sea-Shore Headquarters. At the Marconi site is an interpretive shelter with information on these bluffs. Nearby, a boardwalk trail winds its way through the Atlantic White Cedar Swamp, offering an interesting view of changing environments. The Marconi beach includes lifeguards and other facilities for visitors. Trails and the beach for this area are shown on the Wellfleet map.

6 GREAT ISLAND — This totally undeveloped area is located on the Bay side of the Cape, at the end of Chequesset Neck Road in Wellfleet. This road is occasionally washed out, so it is advisable to check at a visitor center before driving out that way. The island can also be reached by boat. There is a self-guided tour, four miles in length, down the island, and this has been described as rigorous, recommended only to those with good health and sufficient stamina.

7 PILGRIM HEIGHTS AREA — An interpretive shelter here provides information about the historic visit of the Pilgrims to this area, including their discovery of water in what is now known as Pilgrim Spring. The Smalls Swamp Trail runs through a dry glacial pothole, and there are interesting walking and bicycling trails. The monumental Pilgrim Lake Sand Dunes are fun for climbing. There are also guided tours in dune buggies across this desert-like landscape. Nearby is Head of the Meadow Beach which has lifeguards. Trails and the beach for this area are shown on the Truro map.

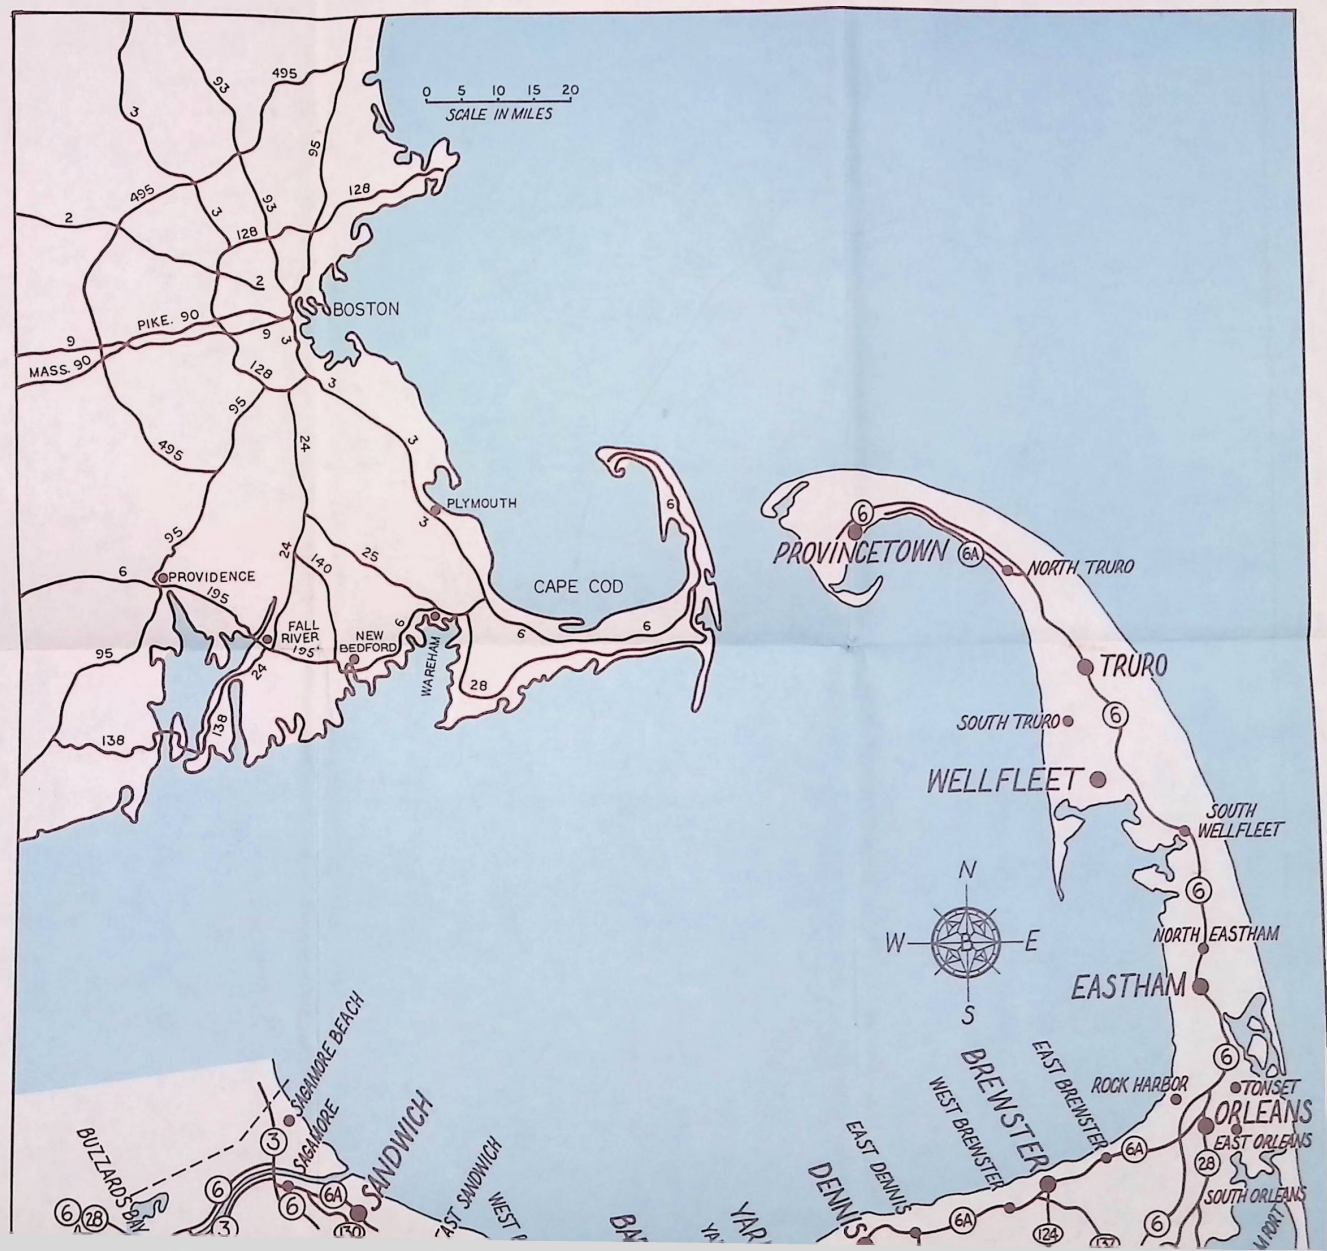

8 BEECH FOREST TRAIL AND PICNIC AREA — An attractive trail runs through a beech forest alongside Beech Point Rd. In the summer, there are

Cape Cod and Wareham. All information is up-to-date and detailed. Each town map shows schools, police and fire stations, ponds, libraries, beaches, historical sites, conservation and recreation areas, bicycle paths, city state and national camping areas, and more. In addition there is valuable and interesting guidebook information for each town, and special sections on the National Seashore, Home Buying, a Special Fishing Guide, etc. PRICE $5.95

9 PROVINCE LANDS VISITOR CENTER — This place offers exhibits, maps, orientation talks and one of the most beautiful overlook vistas on the Cape. On a clear day, one can see across the bay to Duxbury and Plymouth. Outdoor programs take place in the amphitheater here. Bicycle trails pass by here en route to Race Point Beach. Bicycle trails are shown on the Provincetown map.

10 RACE POINT BEACH — It is more than a century since Henry David Thoreau, the naturalist and pacifist, walked along these stretches of sand and wrote his book, "Cape Cod." Thoreau wrote of this place, "here a man may stand, and put all of America behind him." Today, the Cape Cod National Seashore offers the same expanse of white sand, along with bathhouses, restrooms and lifeguard services. This beach is also shown on the Provincetown map.

11 HERRING COVE BEACH — This beach is located just beyond the eastern terminus of U.S. Route 6, which winds its way across America to Bishop, California. Herring Cove Beach includes lifeguards, a refreshment stand and an ample parking lot. The section to the left of the parking lot is predominantly gay beach — Provincetown being the principal summertime gay mecca of New England. There are weekly surf rescue demonstrations and surf fishing demonstrations held here. Bicycle trails cross this area with its long sandy beach and dunes. This beach is also shown on the Provincetown map.
