

Hannah Arendt

[George
notes]

Distinguishing between work and labor, she defined work as the fabrication of durable objects that in their comparative permanence could stabilize human life. People could retrieve their sense of that is, their identity, by being related to the same chair and the same table." Whereas labor is merely "making a living."

In the most intense periods
no irony, humor, or amusement centuries-old sense that they will still be there tomorrow.

~~Identity~~ ⁽¹⁵⁾ Identity - American - (15)

Many Americans process
from one identity crisis

accord a status of changing identities.

It's your nearly warring

When the individual ego is outraged, the identity is threatened and blind rage is the result.

The Islamic fundamentalists build everything on apocalypse.

The Quran can be used for an interpretation with apocalyptic last second conclusions, (the need to feel that there has been a manifestation of the divine or the diabolical to counteract the dumbing down of sensation plus the Black Power, etc.

We have patriotic men with apocalyptic feelings - we Americans will destroy life
in the world.

With the Muslims it is personal self-sacrifice. We laugh at the 7 virgins who are they are wrong, because our confessors tell us so. What if apocalyptic self-sacrifice is real? It is a stone.

too well-vent.) But of course, they couldn't, not on American

the ~~man~~ ^{man} was putting off the bees.

MC17

As diversified as were Lovell's scientific duties for OSs, they were narrow in comparison with those of his main counterpart in the CIA's postwar mind-control program, Dr. Sidney Gottlieb. Gottlieb would preside over investigations that ranged from advanced research in amnesia by electroshock to dragnet searches through the jungles of Latin America for toxic leaves and barks. Fully in the tradition of making Hitler moustacheless, Gottlieb's office would devise a scheme to make Fidel Castro's beard fall out; like Lovell, Gottlieb would personally provide operators with deadly poisons to assassinate foreign leaders like the Congo's Patrice Lumumba, and he would be equally at ease discussing possible applications of new research in neurology. On a much greater scale than Lovell's, Gottlieb would track down every conceivable gimmick that might give one person leverage over another's mind. Gottlieb would preside over arcane fields from handwriting analysis to stress creation, and he would rise through the Agency along with his bureaucratic patron, Richard Helms.

Apparently, the fears and fantasies aroused by the Mindszenty trial and the subsequent Korean War "brainwashing" furor outstripped the facts on hand. The prevalent CIA notion of a "mind-control gap" was as much of a myth as the later bomber and missile "gaps." In any case, beyond the defensive curiosity, mind control took on a momentum of its own.

MC55

The Technical Services Staff (TSS) was investigating in much greater depth the whole area of applying chemical and biological warfare (CBW) to covert operations. TSS was the lineal descendent of Stanley Lovell's Research and Development unit in OSS, and its officials kept alive much of the excitement and urgency of the World War II days when Lovell had tried to bring out the Peck's Bad Boy in American scientists. Specialists from TSS furnished a backup equipment for secret operations: false papers, bugs, taps, suicide pills, explosive seashells, transmitters hidden in false teeth, cameras in tobacco pouches, invisible inks, and the like.

(1950's)

MC57

*Pronounced M-K-ULTRA. The MK digraph simply identified it as a TSS project. As for the ULTRA part, it may have had its etymological roots in the most closely guarded Anglo-American World War II intelligence secret, the ULTRA program, which handled the cracking of German military codes. While good espionage tradecraft called for crytonyms to have no special meaning, wartime experiences were still very much on the minds of men like Allen Dulles.

Ulasewicz testified earlier that he alone paid Bittman $25,000 in fees, leaving the money in a brown envelope in a telephone booth in the lobby of the attorney's office building. (In those days - early 1973 - by the way, Hunt and Mrs. Hunt were called in the White House the "Writer" and the "Writer's Wife."

Watergate - Island

There also is abundant testimony that before her death, Dorothy Hunt was the most active agent in transmitting money requests from her husband to Colson and other White House officials. Even when a Watergate Defendants Relif Fund was set up in Miami to help the men and their families, it turned out that most of the money for it came secretly in cash from Washington, so that the impression could be maintained that the Cuban community was solidly behind the raiders. But this was never the case.

January 1972, Hunt traveled extensively to Florida and California to organize his task force and to plan his next coup. He drove around Washington in a new Chevrolet with a red, white and blue "Re-elect the President" bumper sticker. The other Hunt family car, a Pontiac, had an American flag decal on one window.
