Pristine Park At Water Gap Is at Crossroad

WALPACK CENTER, N.J. — Much of what is now the 70,000-acre Delaware Water Gap National Recreation Area remains as pristine as it was when the Lenni Lenape Indians knew it centuries ago.

But now change may be near for the park that runs along both sides of the river for 37 miles. The National Park Service, operator of the recreation area, has drafted a $78 million, 10-year master plan for the park that would nearly double the number of recreational facilities, increasing land under development

Ex-Crime Chief Denies Charges In Commission Trial Testimony

By ARNOLD H. LUBASCH

A major Mafia informer denied on the witness stand yesterday that he was guilty of drug charges that had put him in prison with a life sentence.

The denial came from Angelo Lonardo, the former underboss of the Cleveland crime family, as he underwent an unusual cross-examination by Carmine Persico, a defendant accused of being a Mafia boss, in the "commission" trial at Federal District Court in Foley Square.

"Mr. Lonardo, my name is Carmine Persico," asked Mr. Persico, acting as his own lawyer. "You have never met me, right?"

"Never," Mr. Lonardo replied, testifying for the prosecution in Federal District Court. When Mr. Persico referred to drug charges that Mr. Lonardo headed a narcotics operation in Cleveland, the witness replied, "I was innocent."

"I understand that," Mr. Persico interjected in a sympathetic tone, "but what did the Government say your part was? What were the charges in the indictment as to what you actually did?"

'I Am Still Innocent'

Mr. Lonardo said he had been charged with "running the thing."

"You said you were innocent of that?" Mr. Persico asked, noting that Mr. Lonardo had been convicted and sentenced to life in prison without parole.

"I am still innocent," the 75-year-old informer replied, raising his voice.

"You found another way to get out of jail, is that right?" Mr. Persico asked.

"To cooperate with the Government, yes," the former Mafia underboss replied.

"You decided to cooperate and that is how you are going to get out of jail?" Mr. Persico asked. "By doing what somebody did to you — testify?"

"That's right," Mr. Lonardo answered.

Defense lawyers continued the cross-examination, attacking the credibility of Mr. Lonardo, who testified on Tuesday that one of the defendants, Anthony (Fat Tony) Salerno, was the boss of the Genovese crime family and a member of the ruling Mafia commission in New York City.

Mr. Lonardo testified yesterday that the boss of Philadelphia's crime family, Angelo Bruno, was killed because he refused to give his members a fair share of his profits.

According to Mr. Lonardo, a Mafia boss in Cleveland told him in 1980 that Mr. Salerno had said the men responsible for the killing of Mr. Bruno were "condemned to death." He said the commission had condemned Mr. Bruno's killers because "they didn't get the O.K. to kill him." Mr. Salerno's lawyer, Anthony M. Cardinale, sought to discredit the witness in an extensive cross-examination.

'I'm Telling the Truth'

Mr. Cardinale noted that Mr. Lonardo had lied under oath more than once in his criminal career. "Sir, perjury is no stranger to you, Angelo Lonardo, is it?" Mr. Cardinale asked.

"Right now," Mr. Lonardo said, "I'm telling the truth."

Referring to key meetings that Mr. Lonardo said he had with Mr. Salerno, the lawyer said, "So we have got to take your word for those meetings, don't we?"

"Yes," answered Mr. Lonardo, testifying in a low voice, his hands folded in his lap.

After Mr. Lonardo was sentenced to life in prison, the lawyer asked, "You felt that you were going to die if you were left to stay in jail?"

"Yes," Mr. Lonardo answered, conceding that he might consider anything that would gain his freedom.

When Mr. Cardinale referred again to Mr. Lonardo's drug conviction, the witness said, "I'm against the drug business." Mr. Lonardo said that two underlings lied in the Diane Frances Giacalone (pronounced Jack-a-LON-ee) was born May 18, 1950, in Queens. Her father was an assistant civ lic reaction.

A decision is expected next year. The Park Service favors the proposal to double the recreational facilities.

The commercial alternative would open 1,900 acres of the park to privately operated dude ranches, resorts, convention hotels, golf courses and bowling alleys. Critics have denounced it as a "sellout" that would destroy the character of the area.

"Turning a nationally designated scenic river into a Disneyland on the Delaware would be an insult to the resource and to all those in and out of government that have battled to preserve this precious environment," said Dr. Barry S. Mikhail S. Gorbachev signaled possible movement toward a compromise with President Reagan on the question of how long the 1972 ABM treaty should remain valid to limit the United States' development of space-based missile defenses. The Soviet leader, in a letter delivered to President Reagan last week, suggests a period of "up to" 15 years instead of the 15 to 20 years asked earlier by the Soviet Union. President Reagan has offered a treaty commitment of seven a half more years. [Page A1, Column 6.]

A report in New York Day by Day yesterday, about the dedication of a plaque on a Greenwich Village apartment house where Eleanor Roosevelt once lived, carried an incorrect identification — issued by the building's owner, New York University — for a Roosevelt biographer. The author is Joseph P. Lash, not his wife, Trude. The university also misstated the building's size; it has 16 stories, including the penthouse.

Girl, 11, Found Strangled Near School in Norwalk

By DIRK JOHNSON

Special to The New York Times

NORWALK, Conn., Sept. 24 — An 11-year-old girl was found strangled early this morning on the wooded grounds of the school she attended, the police said.

The victim, Kathleen Marie Flynn, had been reported missing by her parents late Tuesday afternoon after she did not return home from Ponus Ridge Middle School. She had started the sixth grade there about two weeks ago.

The body was identified by the girl's father, James T. Flynn, owner of Cap'n Henry's restaurant in Rowayton. Her mother, Esther Flynn, teaches mathematics at Stamford High School.

A spokesman for the Medical Examiner's Office in Farmington said an autopsy indicated that the girl had been strangled, but officials had not determined whether she had been sexually abused.

The police said they believed that the girl had been killed shortly after she had left school. They had not determined whether she had cut through the wooded area on her walk home, about one-half mile away, or had been forcibly taken into the secluded area.

The body was discovered at about 3 A.M. after about 70 members of local police and fire squads searched the neighborhood through the night.

"This is a middle- to upper-middle class neighborhood," said Lieut. Robert Fabrizzio. "In 21 years on the police force, I have not heard of anything like this happening here."

School officials today called an assembly in the auditorium to announce the news, and school psychologists and counselors visited each classroom to console students. Detectives today interviewed about 80 students who had been on school grounds after the 2:40 P.M. closing time on Tuesday.

'A Sad Situation'

"Let's put aside some of our kid stuff today," the principal, LeRoy Vaughn, told the students, as they listened in silence.

"As I and others have told you many times, this is a sad situation that can happen at any time and at any place in Norwalk, Darien, New Canaan, Wilton, Westport or Weston — anywhere," he said. "That's why you have to be on your guard every moment."

The Rev. Victor Martin, the associate pastor at St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, looked over photographs of Kathleen presenting the offertory gifts during a recent mass celebrating her grandparents' 50th wedding anniversary.

"Such a beautiful little girl," he said. "Always a smile."

The Flynn family was especially close-knit, he said, and it was not uncommon to find Kathleen and her 14-year-old brother, James, working with their parents at Cap'n Henry's, a seafood restaurant.

Kathleen was an excellent student in school and in religion classes at St. Mary's, he said.

In past years, Mrs. Flynn has also taught religion classes, in addition to her public school teaching and helping out at the restaurant, he said.

"This is a real together-type family," he said. "They were very happy."

Friends and relatives consoled the family at their house in the northwest section of Norwalk, about a mile from the borders of Darien and New Canaan.

News of the death was announced over the public address at all 19 public schools in Norwalk today. The Connecticut Mastery Tests scheduled at the Ponus School for sixth and eighth graders today were postponed.

Kathleen, in her first weeks at the new school, had attended Kendall Elementary School through last spring.

"What a world we live in," Father Martin said.

Friedman Trial Is Due to Hear Secret Witness

Identity Being Withheld With Some Other Data

By RICHARD J. MEISLIN

Special to The New York Times

NEW HAVEN, Sept. 24 — The Government has a mystery witness in its corruption case against Stanley M. Friedman, the Bronx Democratic leader, and four co-defendants.

It also has two pages of material from another, unidentified witness that would be harmful to the Government's case against the five defendants, and it is trying to withhold that material from the defense until the last possible moment, according to testimony given at a hearing tonight.

The Government's effort to keep the identity of the witness a secret and withhold certain materials from the defense occupied most of the morning today as lawyers for the defense and the prosecution met behind closed doors with Judge Whitman Knapp in his chambers in the Federal courthouse at the edge of the New Haven Green.

Decision Protested

But some of the nature of the discussions became public at a conference of defense and prosecution lawyers tonight as defense lawyers protested the Government's decision not to turn over the disputed material. "Mr. Giuliani said one of the reasons for not giving us the material is that it would 'cripple the Government's case,' " said Mr. Friedman's lawyer, Thomas P. Puccio. "That's precisely what discovery is all about."

Rudolph W. Giuliani, the United States Attorney in Manhattan, said he had not used the word "cripple," but he acknowledged that the material "would be prejudicial to the Government's case."

Judge Knapp, speaking to reporters after the meetings this morning, initially would say little more than that a transcript had been made of the discussions and that it would be "unsealed one day."

But after protests from news organizations, the judge said the discussions involved "a witness who may be called in this case by the Government" and whose "identity cannot be disclosed without jeopardizing two other investigations."

Judge Knapp did not say who was conducting these investigations or what they involved, but he said they had "nothing to do with the P.V.B., nothing to do with any defendant now on trial, nothing to do with any associ- [illegible]nts now on trial." ing," said Dan Reidy, a spokesman for the United States Attorney's office, who declined further comment. Since early this year, when word of the undercover operation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation first leaked out, there have been many published reports here that indictments of several officials, including some City Aldermen, were impending.

Much of the investigation here is based on the undercover work of Michael Raymond, a former convict who cooperated with the F.B.I. as a purported employee for Systematic Recovery. He was set up in an apartment here with money to entertain city officials in the hope of obtaining the contract to collect unpaid fines. The meetings and dinners were taped.

The tapes are said to include the voice of Mr. Sandow boasting of paying off New York officials.

Four Received Payments

At least four Aldermen have admitted receiving money from Mr. Raymond. All four — Wallace Davis Jr., Marian Humes, Perry H. Hutchinson and Clifford P. Kelley — said the payments were campaign contributions or charitable gifts. Ms. Humes has said she returned the funds. In a report on campaign financing last summer, Mr. Kelley said he received $7,500 from Mr. Raymond and gave much of it to the United Nations Children's Fund.

According to a transcript of a June 24 pretrial conference among Federal District Judge Whitman Knapp, Assistant United States Attorney William Schwartz and defense attorneys for the five accused New Yorkers, Mr. Schwartz disclosed that Mr. Sandow had signed a "cooperative agreement" with prosecutors. Mr. Schwartz added, "Sandow is going to say, 'I paid bribes here, there and there.' " Part of the agreement involves Mr. Sandow's pleading guilty to three counts of mail fraud.

Jury selection began Monday in New Haven for the trial of the five New York politicians and businessmen accused of making or taking bribes involving New York City's Parking Violations Bureau. The five include Stanley M. Friedman, a former Deputy Mayor who is the Bronx Democratic leader, and Michael J. Lazar, former chairman of the city's Taxi and Limousine Commission.

Investigtors who were looking for corruption in Chicago reportedly began the New York inquiry only after studying tapes of Mr. Sandow describing to Mr. Raymond his New York payments.

Dennison Young, an associate United States Attorney who serves as Mr. Giuliani's spokesman, said that if the witness in question did testify, the witness would do so in open court. He would not explain why it was important to keep the identity a secret at this time.

Lawyers for The New York Times, The Daily News, The New York Post and WNBC-TV said they would jointly file a motion here Thursday, asking for the release of the transcripts of the meetings in the judge's chambers.

In a separate development, Kenneth Conboy, New York City's Investigation Commissioner, said he had been asked by Mr. Giuliani, and ordered by a judge, not to release transcripts and documents about how the Investigation Department handled allegations of corruption at the parking bureau.

Tips on Corruption

The material was gathered during an investigation by John S. Martin Jr., a former United States Attorney, who concluded that the department had mishandled important tips that corruption existed in the bureau.

The material has been requested by The Times and Newsday and by City Councilwoman Ruth W. Messinger.

Some of the tips came from people who are expected to be witnesses at the trial, including James Rose, former comptroller at the parking bureau.

Mr. Conboy, in a letter to the Councilwoman, said he "will authorize release of this material as soon as the United States Attorney indicates to me that such release will not damage his prosecution or run counter to the explict or implied directives of the Federal magistrate."

A Closed Session on Sites

During pretrial hearings earlier this year, Judge Knapp held a closed session with lawyers to discuss the possibility of a change of venue for the trial, which was requested by the defense in an effort to limit the effects of the publicity that the case had received in New York City. After The Associated Press filed a motion to have that transcript released, Judge Knapp agreed to do so, with the locations under discussion and some other details deleted.

Today's meetings, which began before the jury selection was supposed to resume, at first included only Judge Knapp; Mr. Friedman; his lawyer, Mr. Puccio; Mr. Giuliani and a number of Mr. Giuliani's assistants.

The other four defendants and their lawyers sat in the claret- and cream-colored courtroom, chatting with reporters and professing to be equally perplexed over what was happening in the judge's chambers.

The other defendants are Michael J. Lazar, a real-estate developer and former city transportation administrator; Lester N. Shafran, former director of the Parking Violations Bureau; Marvin B. Kaplan, chairman of Citisource Inc., a company that obtained a city contract to manufacture hand-held computers to issue parking tickets, and Marvin Bergman, who was once Mr. Manes's law partner.

They gathered in the hospital dining hall. An employee played the national anthem on a piano. An invocation was given and words of praise expressed. Finally, Lance Cpl. Jose Rodriguez, a paraplegic, lifted himself from his wheelchair and, using a walker, inched forward. He would receive his honor standing tall.

The Marine Corps yesterday gave Mr. Rodriguez, 23, with a National Achievement Medal for "unselfish dedication and concern for his fellow marines." Mr. Rodriguez helped save seven marines in a truck accident last January near Camp Pendleton, Calif., and nearly lost his life.

Mr. Rodriguez, who was born in the Dominican Republic and raised in the Bronx, was driving a five-ton truck up an embankment when he realized the vehicle was beginning to roll down. He was able to alert his fellow marines in the truck so they could escape. Only Mr. Rodriguez was in the truck when it plunged.

Mr. Rodriguez, who returned to the Bronx Veterans Administration Medical Center for rehabilitation, has participated in the National Wheelchair Championship in Dallas.

"He has courage, stamina and an inner strength to forge ahead rather than wallow in the misery of the current situation," a social worker in the medical center, Dawn Cooke, said.

When he received his honor yesterday, Mr. Rodriguez appeared with a crew cut and shiny black boots and wearing khakis, still a marine.

Call From the President

Tears came to Officer Steven McDonald's eyes as he received the telephone call in the Bellevue Hospital Center yesterday morning from President Reagan.

The 29-year-old officer could not answer the President because he was the victim of a shooting in Central Park on July 12 and is paralyzed below the neck and unable to speak.

"Your act of heroism has been noticed not only in New York, but all over the country," Mr. Reagan told Officer McDonald, according to a White House spokesman, Larry Speakes. "As the saying goes, 'I love New York,' and I know New York loves Steven McDonald. You can add another 49 states to your list of supporters."

Answering for the officer, his wife, Patricia, said she had told the President "how overwhelmed we were that he should call."

"It was amazing, the call really lifted him up," said Mrs. McDonald, who is expecting their first child in January.

President Reagan was quoted as telling Officer McDonald, "When the child grows up and is old enough to understand, I know your child will be very proud about the heroism you have demonstrated to protect others."

The officer was shot when he and a sergeant confronted three teen-agers said to be acting suspiciously near the boathouse at Fifth Avenue and 107th Street. The youths were apprehended, and one of them, Shavod Jones, 15, was indicted as a juvenile offender and charged with second-degree attempted murder.

A nurse, Nina Justiniano, said the President's call, which had been put through from Air Force One, had made Officer McDonald very happy.

"It was just beautiful," she said.

Judge Says He Is 'Inclined' To Grant Bail for Chambers

By JOSEPH P. FRIED

A Manhattan judge said yesterday that he was "inclined" to set bail for Robert E. Chambers Jr. but put off a decision until Monday to allow the prosecution time to interview some of the 40 people who wrote to the court in the defendant's behalf.

The judge, Justice Howard E. Bell of State Supreme Court, reserved decision after an hourlong hearing in which sharply different images of Mr. Chambers — accused of killing of Jennifer Dawn Levin — echoed through a courtroom in which the spectators included his somber parents and a dozen of his friends.

A prosecutor, arguing that Mr. Chambers should continue to be held without bail, assailed the defendant — who turns 20 years old today — as a "thug and a murderer" who had lied about how the 18-year-old Miss Levin died in Central Park early on the morning of Aug. 26. At that time, authorities charge, Mr. Chambers strangled the college-bound SoHo resident intentionally or through "depraved indifference" to her life after the couple, who had previously dated, had gone there together from an Upper East Side restaurant and bar.

As the defendant stared straight ahead, the prosecutor, Assistant District Attorney Linda Fairstein, described him as someone of "grave instability" who had abused drugs, had "been thrown out or dropped out" of schools and had "admitted" to the police that he had taken part in burglaries. He has not been charged with any burglaries, but the prosecutor said these cases were being investigated by her office.

Mr. Chambers's lawyer, Jack T. Litman, countered that the 6-foot 4-inch, 220-pound defendant was a "responsible," "trustworthy" young man who had never been convicted of any crime, was now free of drugs and had accidently killed Miss Levin when he "pulled back hard" on her neck as she began hurting him while they were having sex in the park. He noted that Mr. Chambers had graduated from the York Preparatory School on the East Side in 1984 and said he had been seeking admission to Columbia University.

In arguing for "reasonable" bail — Mr. Litman did not propose a figure but said that Mr. Chambers's parents were of "modest means" — the defense attorney noted that the purpose of bail was to insure a defendant's appearance in court, for his trial and other proceedings. To bolster his argument that Mr. Chambers would appear, he gave the judge letters from 40 people — including clergymen and neighbors of the defendant, who lives on East 90th Street — in which they attested to his "reliability" and similar traits.

One of the letter writers was Archbishop Theodore E. McCarrick of Newark, who said he had known Mr. Chambers for years through his mother, Phyllis, a nurse, and found that the defendant's "caring" qualities reflected "an unwillngness to cause pain."

Mr. Chambers lives with his mother, who is separated from his father, Robert Sr., an employee of a videotape cassette distributorship.

Time to Respond

Ms. Fairstein said that to respond to the points made in the letters, she needed to speak with some of the writers, including the Archbishop, to determine how well they knew Mr. Chambers, and Justice Bell gave her until Monday.

Regarding the burglary investigation, other law-enforcement sources said out of court that among the reports being looked into are that Mr. Chambers, serving as a lookout, took part in burglaries with a 20-year-old resident of Roosevelt Island, David Fillyaw. Mr. Fillyaw is facing charges of attempted murder and rape in a separate 1985 case in which Mr. Chambers has not been implicated.

Mr. Litman declined to comment on the burglary inquiry, other than to say that these reported crimes and the statement that Mr. Chambers is said to have made to the police about them "are a year old."

Dyson Vows to Run as a Liberal and 'Mainstream' Democrat

By FRANK LYNN

John S. Dyson, who lost the Democratic primary for the United States Senate nomination two weeks ago, declared yesterday that he would wage an active campaign as the Liberal Party candidate and as a "mainstream" Democrat.

He said that he would issue a series of papers making the point that he was opposing a "left, left-fringe Democrat" — Mark Green — and "a right, right, Jesse Helms-Strom Thurmond Republican" — Senator Alfonse M. D'Amato, the Republican incumbent.

The subject yesterday was national defense, and Mr. Dyson said that the Republican incumbent "has never met a weapons system he doesn't like or an arms control treaty he does like." He said that Mr. Green was "naïve and weak on defense" and "is likely to be torium proposed by Russia."

Meanwhile, Mr. Green, trying to ignore Mr. Dyson, held his own news conference attacking Senator D'Amato as being "unwittingly antifamily" because of his votes to cut preschool Head Start funds and his support of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings legislation that would require further cuts in an effort to reduce the Federal deficit.

'Family Democrat'

Appearing with his wife and one child in front of a Head Start Center at 331 East 70th Street, Mr. Green described himself as "a family Democrat." He said that fewer than 20 percent of eligible children are now in Head Start programs "in the face of clear evidence that Federal education programs can make a difference for low-income and minority students."

In response to questions, he brushed

Mr. Dyson's political base "is a teardrop in an ocean of votes" and that the Senate race was essentially two-way.

Mr. D'Amato, meanwhile, did the nuts and bolts politicking that has characterized his six years in office. He announced a $10.7 million Federal grant for an office, housing and parking project on the Long Island Rail Road terminal site in downtown Brooklyn.

Mr. Dyson, at his news conference at the Howard Hotel, 127 East 55th Street adjacent to his business office, said that he favored appropriations for the Stealth bomber, the mobile single-warhead Midgetman missile as an alternative to the MX, modernization of conventional military forces and $2 billion of research funds for the Strategic Defense Initiative. He said that he would support the 1979 Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty "as long as it is observed ban treaty and a mutual and verifiable nuclear freeze."

He said that he opposed the MX missile and the "obsolete" B-1 bomber.

Mr. Dyson said that he would release a series of statements about his differences with Mr. D'Amato and Mr. Green on the issues. With Liberal Party leaders watching, he said that he and they would run his campaign and that he had "fired" Philip Friedman, the media and political consultant who guided Mr. Dyson's primary campaign, in which $6 million was spent.

The Liberal leader, Raymond B. Harding, said that the party would campaign for its entire ticket, including Governor Cuomo, who has endorsed Mr. Green even though neither the Governor nor his aides have made contact with Mr. Harding and other Liberals who were elected party lead-on the condition that they not be named, said it was possible that the commander, Deputy Inspector Donald T. Bishop, might face disciplinary action because of the allegations against the officers who had worked under him. Inspector Bishop, reached by telephone late yesterday, said that he believed he had acted properly.

Police Commissioner Benjamin Ward and Mayor Koch at news conference yesterday on corruption case.

2 Approached Fellow Officers With Extortion Idea

Mr. Ward said there was no indication that the suspected corruption had penetrated into other units of the department, such as the narcotics division. While declining to provide specifics, he said that "this case is very different from the Knapp Commission cases," in which investigators in the early 70's found the police had engaged in the organized extortion of gambling and narcotics suspects.

Mayor Koch, who earlier in the day had said the allegations were the kind that made him "want to weep," praised the department for initiating and conducting the investigation that resulted in the suspensions.

Complaints and Reports

One official familiar with the case said yesterday that as early as 1984, the department had received reports from drug dealers in the precinct that officers were stealing from them, but had been unable to substantiate the reports. The official said internal affairs agents had not earlier reported that they suspected corruption in the precinct.

In the spring of 1985, a dealer com-

Using the drug dealer in an undercover role, the internal affairs division this year had him record conversations with the two veteran officers in the 77th Preinct, identified yesterday as Anthony Magno and Henry Winter. Officials said the officers had agreed not to bother the dealer in exchange for money and drugs.

The officers, facing the likelihood of criminal charges and the certainty of departmental discipline, agreed to cooperate with the investigators by wearing hidden recording devices. Over several months, they approached the 13 other officers, usually two or three at a time, and proposed that they participate in "ripping off" dealers, as they taped the conversations, the officials said.

'Knew Who Would Participate'

One official familiar with the case said it was possible one of the 13 suspended officers had approached the undercover agents. But in the other cases, the official said, the undercover officers "thought out their targets — they knew who would participate."

"There was clearly fertile soil here," the official said.

Late last week, with the key phase of the investigation over, the department removed the two officers from the precinct, and rumors of a possible sting spread quickly through the Utica Avenue station house.

Officers Magno and Winter, who have been reassigned to the internal affairs division, will likely be dismissed from the force after they have testified in the case, officials said. The department other post in the Brooklyn North patrol command, without informing him of the inquiry. He was replaced by Capt. Ralph M. Dumond, who was a trusted aide to Patrick J. Murphy, then the first deputy police commissioner.

A high-ranking police official said Captain Dumond had been assigned to the precinct because officials were "nervous" about the investigation. The official, who emphasized that no conclusions had been reached about Captain Bishop's performance, said he had been promoted largely as a "matter of course."

The official said it was possible that, along with other supervisors, he might be faulted for the reported activities of their troops.

'I Am Accountable'

Inspector Bishop, who is now the executive officer of Zone 15 in Brooklyn, said:

"I am aware that I am accountable. I did make the proper reports and notifications of any alleged corrupt activities and hazards under my command."

Inspector Bishop said that the undercover officers had not begun their inquiry until earlier this year, after he had left the precinct, and that some of the suspended officers had not arrived until after he had left.

Mr. Ward, asked whether any ranking officers would be transferred or disciplined as a result of the case, said, "I don't know yet, I really don't know."

Other department officials indicated that such actions, if they occurred, would not likely be taken until after the grand jury had finished its inquiry.

13 Police Suspensions: Lessons of '68

By MARTIN GOTTLIEB

It has been 18 years since two frustrated New York City police officers, David Durk and Frank Serpico, went to newspapers with allegations of widespread police corruption after being all but ignored by their superior officers.

The result was the last major scandal to hit the department — one in which corruption was found to be endemic and widespread.

Since then, the country's largest police department has undergone an era of upheaval and overhauls. In a peculiar way, several analysts said yesterday, those sweeping changes were reflected in the suspension Tuesday of 13 police officers in Brooklyn who were accused of extorting money and drugs from narcotics dealers.

Unlike the situation in 1968, when the two policemen took their grievances to the press to get justice, the analysts said, this time the Police Department took seriously allegations of misconduct — even though they came from known street criminals.

Willing to Face Questions

The department developed the allegations with the help of an outside prosecutor, and, in the end, it broke a case that indicates a departmental willingness to grapple with the unflattering questions it raises about police corruption.

"The department discovered the problem itself and that saves it the embarrassment of being revealed by someone else," said Patrick V. Murphy, the city's Police Commissioner during the turbulent era dominated by the often-lurid revelations of graft that formed the basis of the Knapp Commission report on corruption.

The police department and Mayor Koch also say that the charges appear to be isolated ones that do not reflect systemic corruption.

Nonetheless, the allegations of corruption raise a host of questions for the department, which has received 2,000 corruption allegations through August of this year. "

Supervision and Risks at Issue

Among the questions the department is facing are how well the anticorruption programs are holding up, how well street police officers are being supervised, and what corruption risks the most recent departmental initiatives pose.

Those initiatives are part of a trend in law enforcement that is swinging in the opposite direction from those encouraged by the Knapp Commission, which counseled, for example, against emphasizing street-level drug arrests in favor of long-range investigations of higher-level operatives. Among other things, a de-emphasis on street arrests was designed to severely limit the chances for corruption by removing opportunities for interaction between police officers and drug dealers.

By the time Mr. Ward became Police Commissioner nearly three years ago, however, heroin markets had become so prevalent in some neighborhoods that they attracted [illegible] spread street sweeps since the Knapp Commission and a number of other initiatives, including extensive use of foot patrols, that the post-Knapp police department looked at warily because of their potential to stimulate corruption-provoking encounters.

Close supervision of police officers was another key recommendation of the Knapp Commission, which recommended a ratio of one sergeant to every eight officers in the department. Because of litigation over a recent civil-service test for sergeant, there are more than 600 vacanct positions for sergeant in the department, leading to a ratio of one sergeant to eleven officers among uniformed officers. At a news conference yesterday, Mr. Ward said that the level was acceptable and was being monitored closely.

Key Results of '68 Scandal

Other key programs that came out of the scandal in 1968 include a greatly strengthened, 100-member Internal Affairs Division, a system of "field associates" in which officers voluntarily and confidentially report on suspected wrongdoing in their precincts, and a total of 10 and a half hours of anticorruption instruction for new recruits at the Police Academy.

Many critics give the department and John Guido, the chief of inspectional services who runs the operations, high [illegible] for the programs.

Yet, Chief Anthony Bouza of Min- [illegible]

commanders during a long career here, said the field-associate program appeared to be "atrophying" although he praised the department for the suspensions Tuesday.

"I don't see evidence of its success," he said. "If it was really working, the union would be hysterical, cops would be abusing officers they think are field associates, and there would be a lot more uncovering of crime."

'Vigorous Action'

But Thomas Reppetto, president of the Citizens Crime Commission, summed up many other critics' opinions when he said: "What is good here is that the Police Department and the special prosecutor have moved to take vigorous action. We'll have to wait for further developments to see if its an isolated incident, but right now this ranks as a major problem, not a major scandal."

And Mr. Durk still thinks the department's effort is lacking.

"I think the vast majority of cops want to be absolutely straight, but m impression is that they are hardly we comed with open arms," he sa "They normally are told to wear a w and to testify, which can lead to th being completely ostracized, and th there is no support mechanism those people afterward."

This is disputed by [illegible] members of the department, who [illegible] to come forward.

"ripped off" by officers. Later, internal affairs investigators learned from a parole officer in Brooklyn that another suspected dealer, who had been arrested while on parole, said he had been "shaken down" by the police.

the two officers.

Reaction by Union Lawyer

Police officials said the 13 officers were suspended because Mr. Hynes had given his approval and the department did not want the targets of the investigation to remain on duty in positions from which they might threaten the undercover officers.

Mr. Ward said the officers were not arrested, because that was not the usual policy in such cases and arresting them might have hurt the continuing inquiry.

A lawyer for the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association, Richard Hartman, said yesterday that he would seek to have the officers reinstated, pending action by the grand jury.

Officials said the reported thefts usually occurred during the midnight-to-8 A.M. tour, which most, if not all, of the suspended officers usually worked. Riding in police cars in uniform, apparently sometimes with Officers Mango and Winter, the accused officers visited known drug dealers and forced them to give up drugs and money.

Trusted Aide Installed

The reported thefts apparently did not generally involve violence. "In some cases, I suspect protection was offered, but there's absoutely no evidence that there's any connection between protection promised and the actions of the narcotics division, which is responsible for making busts," one official said.

Last September, at the time it referred the case to Mr. Hynes's office, the department transferred Inspector Bishop, who was then a captain, to an-

Market in Harlem To Be Redeveloped

By The Associated Press

Mayor Koch said yesterday that a private developer would spend $7.5 million to revitalize the Park Avenue Retail Market in Spanish Harlem, better known as La Marqueta.

At a news conference, the Mayor said the city's Department of Ports, International Trade and Commerce had designated the development team of San James Realty Corporation and General Atlantic Realty Corporation to improve and expand the 50-year-old food market.

La Marqueta has 29,000 square feet in five buildings beneath elevated railroad tracks on Park Avenue between 111th and 116th Streets. Forty-seven merchants lease 8,000 square feet there.

The president of San James, James Sanchez, said the buildings would be rehabilitated and three new ones built in the parking area between 116th and 119th Streets. The new eight-building complex will provide a total of 80,000 square feet.

Suspended Officers' Service Records

The 13 officers in the 77th Precinct in Brooklyn who were suspended Tuesday are a mixture of veterans and rookies.

All but two received Police Department citations for good performance. Several also received official reprimands.

The highest citation in the list, the Exceptional Merit Award, is given for acts involving personal danger. The next highest is the Commendation, given for an act of bravery involving personal danger.

The third highest, a citation for Meritorious Police Duty, is for actions or suggestions over a long period. The award for Excellent Police Duty covers a broad category of actions or suggestions in a specific period.

The Exceptional Merit Award, second only to the Gold Shield Award, is for acts involving grave personal danger.

These are the service records of the officers, according to information supplied by the department:

¶Officer Thomas J. Brennan, 24. On the force since 1984, he has recived no departmental citations.

¶Officer James W. Day, 26. On the force since 1984, he has received two citations for Excellent Police Duty.

¶Officer William J. Gallagher, 38. On the force also since 1969, Mr. Gallagher received 29 citations for Excellent Police Duty, 5 for Meritorious Police Duty, 1 Commendation and 1 Exceptional Merit Award.

¶Sgt. Robert J. Jervas, 40 years old. On the force since 1969, Sergeant Jervas is the most senior of those suspended. He has received 13 citations for Excellent Police Duty, 2 for Meritorious Police Duty and 1 Commendation.

¶Officer Frank J. Lauria Jr., 27. A member of the force since 1984, Officer Lauria has received 13 citations for Excellent Police Duty and 1 for Meritorious Police Duty.

¶Officer Thomas J. Murphy, 28. An officer since 1982, he has received one citation for Excellent Police Duty. Last May, Officer Murphy forfeited 15 vacation days for several actions, including pulling a telephone out of a wall and lying during a departmental investigation. Last June, he forfeited five vacation days for several actions, including failing to respond promptly to an assignment without notifying the dispatcher.

¶Brian F. O'Regan, 41. A policeman since 1973, Officer O'Regan has received seven citations for Excellent Police Duty and one Commendation.

¶Officer Gilbert Ortiz, 22. A member of the department since 1984, he has received one citation for Excellent Police Duty and one for Meritorious Police Duty.

¶Officer Robert D. Rathbun, 35. A policeman since 1973, Mr. Rathbun has received 29 citations for Excellent Police Duty, 17 for Meritorious Police Duty and 4 Commendations. In 1982, Mr. Rathbun was reprimanded for several incidents, including the failures to investigate properly a ringing alarm and to answer a traffic summons.

¶Officer Nicholas W. Scaturico, 34. On the force since 1979, he has received one citation for Excellent Police Duty and two for Meritorious Police Duty.

¶Officer Albert W. Smolinski, 29. A member of the department since 1983, he has received six citations for Excellent Police Duty and two for Meritorious Police Duty.

¶Officer Crystal A. Spivey, 29. An officer since 1981, she was the sole woman suspended. She has received no departmental citations. In 1981, she was suspended 30 days for several actions, including failing to obey an order and unexplained absences. Last year, she was suspended 60 days for lying during a departmental investigation and failing to obey an order.

¶Officer David J. Williams, 41. A member of the department since 1973, Mr. Williams has received six citations for Excellent Police Duty, two for Meritorious Police Duty and one Commendation.

Goetz Lawyers Request Removal of Prosecutor

Lawyers for Bernhard H. Goetz, charged with shooting four youths on a Manhattan subway train in 1984, have asked that a prosecutor be taken off the case because they intend to call him as a witness.

The motion was filed Tuesday before Acting Justice Stephen G. Crane of the State Supreme Court in Manhattan.

The prosecutor, Gregory L. Waples, declined to comment last night.

In July, the State Court of Appeals reinstated attempted murder and assault charges against Mr. Goetz, who shot the four youths on Dec. 22, 1984, because, he said, he feared they were going to rob him.

Mark Baker, a partner in the law firm of Slotnick, Cutler and Baker, which is representing Mr. Goetz, said last night of Mr. Waples, "We feel he has exculpatory information with regard to the motives of Troy Canty and James Ramseur" — two of the four men that Mr. Goetz shot.

Originally, Mr. Baker said, Mr. Canty told the police "that all four had all surrounded Mr. Goetz." But before a second grand jury, they said only Mr. Canty had approached Mr. Goetz, he said.

Mr. Baker said Mr. Waples's testimony was needed "so that the jury will understand the impunity that these two kids felt in testifying falsely."

ronmental, labor and civic organizations.

Richard Ring, assistant superintendent of the park, said the Park Service did not favor the commercial plan but was obligated to include it among the proposals to determine whether the public wants it. He said commercial development was legal under the 1965 law that created the recreation area.

The legislation called for a management plan that gives priority to public recreation and preservation of scenic, scientific and historic features of the area.

But it permits "such utilization of natural resources as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior is consistent with and does not significantly impair" the priority uses. Mr. Ring said logging and mining in the park out of sight from the river could be allowed.

A Fee for Swimming

Under the commercial alternative, visitors who now use Park Service facilities, such as river beaches, without charge would pay to swim at beaches operated by concessionaires.

In addition, much of the parkland stretching east and west of the river would be leveled for farming or leased to logging and mining companies.

"Profit motivation would determine the highest and best use," according to the plan, with the restriction that clear-cutting of timber and open-pit mining out cars would be public transportation to the park and on the 250 miles of roads within it.

A 1975 study prepared for Congress found that a recreation area here would serve millions of people in a 100-mile radius. There is now no public transportation to the recreation area, but Superintendent Amos Hawkins said shuttle buses could be offered inside if there was sufficient demand.

The recreation area had 2.2 million visitors last year, most arriving by car, the rest by tour bus. Park Service planners project 3.3 million visitors annually by 1996 with no further development, 5 to 6.9 million under the favored plan and up to 9.2 million with commercial development.

Park Service records show that most visitors come to swim, canoe, camp, picnic or just drive around to admire the rippling tributaries of the Delaware and the sparkling lakes hidden in the forests and mountains. Sightseeing will swell soon when the maple, oak and beech trees blaze with fall color.

Others come to hunt or fish, or to hike the 25 miles of the Appalachian Trail in the park or a myriad of other trails. Rangers offer nature-study programs in the park and restored or preserved historic farmhouses are sites for talks on the history and culture of the area back to the arrival of settlers in the 17th century.

To preserve this stretch of the river, Congress added it in 1978 to the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System.

Plans for a dam at Tocks Island that would have inundated 12,000 acres of the recreation area on both the Pennsylvania and New Jersey sides of the river had been shelved three years earlier following opposition by environmentalists.

Clouding the future of any plan is the possibility of revival of the dam proposal.

Little Tocks Island is now a primitive campsite for canoeists in the recreation area and environmentalists would like to see it remain so. But the Park Service master plan acknowledges that Congress has not withdrawn its 1962 authorization of the dam.

It will be reconsidered by the Delaware River Basin Commission, which regulates water use in the Delaware basin, after the year 2000 if the four-state commission believes it is needed for water supply then.

In that case, according to the 255-page draft of the master plan, many of the newly constructed facilities and renovated historic buildings would be inundated and Park Service planners would have to start over again.

Spectacular Water Gap

Waterfalls here cascade into stands of hemlock and tangles of wild rhododendron, whitetail deer browse in dappled glens and the Delaware River still slices through the spectacular water gap it cut in the Kittatinny Mountains centuries ago.

Mr. Ring said there had been "very little" public support so far for the commercial plan, while backing for the nondevelopment alternative and the Park Service's favored plan of doubled development has been substantial.

The version of the master plan favored by the Park Service would increase the number and size of beaches, hiking trails, campsites and the number of historic farmhouses to be preserved.

A few restaurants and gasolne stations might be added and historic houses in the park might be restored for bed and breakfast or country inn lodging, according to the plan, to "provide opportunities for visitors who are not comfortable in traditional camping situations to stay overnight in the Recreation Area."

'A Vehicular Invasion'

Mina Hamilton, president of the Delaware Valley Conservation Association, an organization of environmentalists and residents of the park area said her group endorses the Park Service's favored proposal, "but with severe reservations."

"Most of the construction they envision is additional parking space, catering to a vehicular invasion," she said.

"The central concept of this plan does not seem to be the river, but the parking space," said Dr. Allen, who lives in the park at Flatbrookville, N.J., and teaches at Rollins College in Winter Park, Fla., as chairman of the environmental studies department.

"The park is being planned around private automobiles. That's a shame because there are many autoless people in the New York-Newark area who cannot get to the park."

He said a solution for overuse by automobiles and underuse by those with-

Gotti Trial Opening Statements Today

By LEONARD BUDER

After six weeks of jury selection and six months of pretrial legal maneuvers, opening statements are to start this morning in the Federal racketeering trial of John Gotti, the reputed boss of the nation's most powerful organized-crime family, and six co-defendants.

All are accused in a two-count indictment of taking part, as members of the Gambino crime family, in a criminal enterprise involving loansharking, illegal gambling, hijacking, robbery and at least three murders. If convicted, each could be sent to prison for 20 years.

At 5:18 P.M. yesterday, after the six alternate jurors were selected, a court clerk, Willilam J. Walsh, formally swore in the 12-member jury and the alternates. To prevent possible tampering, the identities of the jurors and alternates, and where they live and work, have been kept secret.

The trial, which is expected to last six or eight weeks, is taking place before Judge Eugene H. Nickerson in United States District Court in Brooklyn.

'Hit Man' Expected to Testify

The government — Diane F. Giacalone will be the chief prosecutor, assisted by John Gleeson — is expected to rely heavily on testimony from informants and on evidence obtained from wiretaps and electronic bugs.

Among the expected prosecution witnesses are Dominick Lofaro, an admitted "hit man" for the Gambino family who became a Government informer and wore a recording device to mob meetings; and James Cardinali, now serving a prison term for a 1981 slaying. The actual witness list has so far been kept confidential.

Barry I. Slotnick, one of the defense lawyers, said in court yesterday that it was his "understanding" that Mr. Cardinali had been "involved in a plot to kill an F.B.I. agent and that there are Government reports with regard to that." He asked for the reports but Ms. Giacalone said that whatever information the Government had about the witness would be disclosed to the defense at a later time.

One of the previously selected jurors, a 55-year-old woman who works as a nurse's aide, asked to be excused because of hardship. A replacement was then selected.

12 Jurors Among 600 Persons

The 12 jurors, who are identified by numerical designations, were chosen from more than 600 persons who filled out a court-devised questionnaire to screen those who were not suited to serve, such as those who said they had an impression or opinion that would prevent them from rendering a fair verdict. Those who passed the initial screening were questioned by Judge Nickerson.

The jury of six men and six women that emerged from the lengthy selection process is predominantly white, and the majority of the jurors live in unspecified suburban areas. Capsule sketches of the 12 jurors follow, taken from their questionnaires and from their statements in court:

Juror I: A 65-year-old man of Irish ancestry who is a retired chauffeur and former cook. He served in the Army during World War II, is married and has three children.

Juror 2: A 35-year-old man of Italian ancestry. He is single, a college graduate, and works as an office assistant at a publishing company. He lives in the suburbs.

Juror 3: A 24-year-old Brooklyn-born woman of Italian ancestry. She is single, a college graduate, and works in auditing and accounting. She resides in an urban area.

Juror 4: A 47-year-old woman of Italian ancestry who is married and has three children. She has three years of high school, works full-time as a bookkeeper and lives in the suburbs.

Juror 5: A 39-year-old woman of Austrian ancestry whose husband, an Italian-American, owns a bar. They have one child and own a house in the suburbs.

Juror 6: A 36-year-old man who was born in Puerto Rico and works as a train operator. He is a former Marine and attended high school.

Juror 7: A 34-year-old man who was borning in Manchester, England, and works as an electrical employee. A high school graduate, he is married and has one child and lives in the suburbs.

Juror 8: A 45-year-old woman of Irish and Italian background who works full-time as a mail handler. She is separated from her husband and has three children. She attended college for a year and owns her own home in the suburbs.

Juror 9: A 31-year-old black woman who was born in Oklahoma City. She is single, has a master's degree and works as an assistant buyer. She lives in an urban area.

Juror 10: A 45-year-old man of Irish ancestry who is married and has four children. He is a Marine veteran who attended college for two years and works as a data processing manager. He owns a house in the suburbs.

Juror 11: A 48-year-old man of German and Swedish background who is married to a registered nurse and has two children. He works in the oil business amd owns a house in the suburbs.

Juror 12: A 33-year-old black woman — the replacement chosen yesterday — who is married and works as an accounts receivable supervisor. She is a college graduate and lives in an urban area.

In addition to Mr. Gotti, the other defendants are Leonard DiMaria, 45; Nicholas Corozzo, 46; Eugene Gotti, 39, a brother of Mr. Gotti; John Carneglia, 42; Anthony Rampino, 46, and Wilfred Johnson, 51.

She then spent 18 months in the Justice Department's tax division in Washington before joining the United States Attorney's office in Brooklyn in January 1979.

think it's important work. It's worth doing responsibly." She added, "There are very few people who can be proud every day of the job they do."

'A Great Amount of Idealism'

Her boss, Mr. Maloney, said, "The difference between good prosecutors and the great ones — well there's a great amount of idealism."

Miss Giacalone, who lives in Manhattan, relaxes by going to movies and the theater. She is a New York Jets fan and enjoys skiing and cooking. When she can find the time, she spends weekends restoring an old house in upstate New York.

ney tells how he and Ms. Giacalone spent two years years investigating and prosecuting a complicated insurance fraud case which she approached as if it were a puzzle. The case led to 50 convictions.

They computerized 2,000 auto insurance files and then, working with programmers, designed a program that allowed them to find patterns of fraud and identify the guilty parties.

Although she had initiated the case and was senior to Mr. Maas, she let him present the case in court.

"That shows a generosity and loyalty to friends," he said.

narcotics case by saying he had financed their drug dealing.

Mr. Lonardo said he had agreed to cooperate with the Government three years ago and was testifying about "anything I knew." He said there were two Mafia commissions, one in New York City for the eastern part of the country and one in Chicago for the western part.

When Mr. Cardinale asked if he would "testify against your own brother" at the Government's request, Mr. Lonardo paused for a moment and said, "I believe I would, yes."

He said he hoped to be paroled as a result of his cooperation with the authorities.

As he completed his testimony, Mr. Lonardo said he had concealed his cooperation for fear of being killed by his former associates. If they had know he was cooperating, he said, "They would have put a contract out on me."

The witness said he had decided to cooperate because "I missed my family and I decided to be straight from there on."

Mr. Persico returned to ask a few final questions before Mr. Lonardo left the witness stand.

"You were lonesome in prison?" asked Mr. Persico.

"Yes, I was," answered Mr. Lonardo, adding that his current life in custody as a cooperating witness was "better than prison."

The eight defendants in the trial are charged with taking part in racketeering activities of the commission, described as the "ruling council" of the Mafia.

HOME EQUITY CUSTOMERS CAUGHT IN BANK HOLDUP.

The way some banks make you wait for approval on a home equity line of credit is almost a crime.

But at Marine Midland, we can issue you a check for $5,000 to $20,000 depending on your line request—in just 72 hours after you qualify.

With most other banks, you'll wait about 6 weeks before you see a penny. And the way we see it, if you've got equity in your home, you should be able to get cash fast. Without having your bank make a federal case out of it.

Cohalan Vetoes Ban on Drug Testing

Special to The New York Times

HAUPPAUGE, L.I., Sept. 24 — The Suffolk County Executive vetoed a bill today that would have banned mandatory drug testing for employees of the county and private companies.

The measure would have been one of the strongest prohibitions against drug testing in the country, according to its backers. They said they would seek to override the veto by the Republican County Executive, Peter F. Cohalan, in the 18-member County Legislature.

The chief deputy county executive, Frank R. Jones, said at a news conference that Mr. Cohalan favored limited drug testing of county employees whose jobs involved public safety, such as police officers and heavy-equipment operators, and that he wanted mandatory drug testing for applicants for county jobs. Mr. Cohalan did not attend the news conference because he was ill according to Eric Kopp, a spokesman.

Mr. Jones said the county was beginning an employee assistance program to detect and assist drug users among the 11,000 county employees.

In his veto message, Mr. Cohalan said: "An outright ban on drug testing would be a giant step backward in the fight against drug abuse since it would allow the user to call the shots in this battle. There is a middle ground between mandatory or random testing and no testing at all."

A Democratic county legislator who proposed the ban, Steven Levy of Holbrook, said he expected the veto and would lobby to get it overridden. The legislators approved the bill on Aug. 26 by 10 to 7, with one legislator absent.

The votes of two-thirds of the legislators are needed to override the veto. One legislator who supported the bill, Michael M. D'Andre, a Smithtown Republican, said today he had changed his mind after discussing the issue with private employers and county officials and would withdraw his support. "I'm going to right a wrong," he said.

The president of the Long Island Association, James L. Larocca, said the association, which represents 2,900 businesses, was pleased with the veto. "Businesses really should be free to struggle with this problem according to their own needs," he said.

Employee drug testing has been increasing on Long Island, according to supporters of the bill, who view such testing as intruding on privacy and violating constitutional rights against unreasonable searches.

"Cohalan had a wonderful opportunity to be a symbol by sending a message of hope and encouragement to employees all across the state and the nation that elected officials do care about protecting and enhancing civil rights of working people," said the executive director of the New York Civil Liberties Union, Norman Siegel. "He chose not to send that message."

The president of the Suffolk County Association of Municipal Employees, Charles Novo Jr., said the union, representing 7,000 county employees, opposed any drug testing of county workers. "It's unconstitutional," he said.

He said the union did support an employee assistance program to help drug abusers. But he said he knew of no cases in which the county had brought disciplinary charges against an employee suspected of drug use on the job.

Increases in Marijuana Potency Raising Concern

samples involved sinsemilla, a type of marijuana cultivated to have no seeds and especially high THC content in its flowering top. Sinsemilla samples often tested at THC levels of 6.5 percent, Dr. Hawks said, and, in a small number of samples, as high as 12 percent.

"If you are driving down the highway and someone hands you a joint and it is 7 percent sinsemilla, with one toke you are going to get very high very fast," Dr. Hawks said.

Marijuana, which in the 1960's grew from a drug seen only by a relatively small subculture of users to a commonplace of youth culture, has declined in popularity among teen-agers in the 1980's. According to a Federally financed annual survey conducted by social scientists at the University of Michigan, the percentage of high school seniors who said they used marijauna in the last year declined to 42 percent in 1985, from 51 percent in 1980.

22 Million Regular Users

But more than 40 million people are believed to have tried the drug, and the number of regular users is estimated at 22 million, compared with 5 million for cocaine, and 500,000 for heroin. Its popularity far outlived the other hallucinogenic drugs that rose to prominence in the 1960's, such as LSD and mescaline.

Since the mid-1970's, the forces of the illegal drug marketplace, as well as the forces of the law, have changed the product dramatically.

As a result of eradication efforts in Mexico, Colombia and other countries, and a major move against smugglers in South Florida, domestic marijuana production grew, with many cultivators using small plots and indoor growing rooms. Since they had less space, they could grow less of their product, experts say, and the cultivators concentrated on developing more powerful strains, that could be sold at higher prices.

"It was good old American ingenuity," said John Howell, an editor of High Times magazine, whose subject is illegal drug use. "People had to concentrate on increased potency to get a higher profit. You had to make what you can grow go further."

In addition to growing more potent strains brought from around the world, marijuana farmers in large numbers have produced sinsemilla in the United States through a labor-intensive process that involves separating male and female plants to stop pollination from taking place. The result are flowers with extremely high resin and THC content.

A coalition of more than 7,000 parents groups concerned about drug use has made marijuana potency a major point of community and school meetings around the country, said Donald M. Delzer, chairman of the board of directors of the National Federation of Parents for Drug Free Youth.

"Parents who experimented in their youth are not aware that the potency is much higher," Mr. Delzer said. "We want to defuse the notion: 'My kids are smoking pot, thank God they are not doing cocaine.' "

For drug counselors, determining the potency of marijuana used by a youth is becoming an important part of determining a teen-ager's drug problem, said Ellen R. Morehouse, the executive director of student assistance services in Westchester County, N.Y., which runs counseling programs in 38 schools.

"Potency has become so significant that, when they say they smoke marijuana, we ask what kind?," she said.

Government drug experts acknowledge that much of the anti-marijuana publicity before the mid-1960's was based on exaggeration and scare tactics and that, as a result, many people who later used marijuana tend to disregard warnings from authorities about the drug.

According to a highly detailed report on marijuana research, conducted by the National Academy of Sciences, the drug can cause serious short-term effects, including anxiety attacks, confusion and delirium, as well as impaired motor coordination and learning ability.

Recent studies also point to growing evidence that marijuana use may have serious long-term health effects, including lung damage and impairment of the immune and reproductive systems.

However, the report, which was released in 1982, said that reliable evidence on long-term health consequences was still inconclusive and called for further research.

Poll Finds 40% of Young Doctors Admit Drug Use

BOSTON, Sept. 24 (AP) — Nearly 40 percent of physicians under the age of 40 admitted in a survey that they had used marijuana or cocaine with friends, and a quarter of doctors of all ages said they had recently treated themselves with mind-affecting drugs.

Over all, more than half the physicians and three-quarters of the medical students who participated in the survey, conducted by Harvard University, said they had used drugs at least once for self-treatment, for the euphoria or to help them stay awake.

Only 1 percent of the doctors surveyed said their drug use had ever caused them to give poor care to patients.

Most physicians said they had used these drugs only occasionally, if at all. But the researchers, headed by Dr. William E. McAuliffe of the Harvard School of Public Health, say medical students and young doctors are more experienced with drugs than are older physicians. And they predict that the proportion of drug-taking doctors will grow as medical students set up practice and take their habits with them.

"Perhaps for the first time," they wrote, "appreciable although small proportions of persons entering medicine have histories of extensive drug use and dependence."

Cases of Self-Treatment

But they concluded that the drug use they found "should not be cause for great alarm," because it simply reflects growing drug use in American life.

The findings are reported in the issue of The New England Journal of Medicine to be published Thursday. The study was based on a random survey of 500 practicing physicians and 504 medical students in Massachusetts conducted in November 1984. The margin of sampling error for each group was plus or minus four percentage points.

Among older doctors, the most common questionable use of drugs was self-treatment, taking opiates and tranquilizers for pain and stress without seeking another physician's care.

"Most people in medicine would recommend that someone not self-treat," said Dr. McAuliffe. "But my study shows that a fairly substantial proportion do at some time in their lives."

In the year before the survey, 25 percent of the physicians said they had treated themselves with a or mind-affecting drug, while 42 percent had done this at some point in their lives.

Recreational use of drugs is more common among young physicians. The study found that besides marijuana, these doctors use "the full spectrum of psychoactive drugs," and this has become "an important cause of drug-related impairment for them."

In an accompanying editorial, Dr. David C. Lewis of Brown University recommended more emphasis on the dangers of drug abuse in medical school. He noted that the study found that the students surveyed had received more formal education about drug problems than had practicing doctors.

"In my view," he wrote, "this finding reflects a movement in medical education from almost total neglect to general inadequacy."

House Passes Education Bill

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24 (AP) — The House of Representatives today voted 385 to 25 to pass a compromise bill on higher education that tightens the requirements for financial aid while extending the help to part-time, nontraditional students.

The bill, expected to win Senate approval next week, sets a ceiling of $10.2 billion in loans, grants and other aid programs for the fiscal year 1987, which begins Oct. 1. Expenditures in the fiscal year 1986 were about $8.5 billion.

The higher education program, expiring at the end of this month, will be renewed for five years under the new bill. Among its new features are these:

¶All students applying for loans would have to take a means test. The requirement is currently imposed only on those with family incomes above $30,000.

¶Institutions of higher education would have to certify they have a drug abuse prevention program to participate in student aid programs.

¶The interest rate on loans would increase from 8 percent to 10 percent in the fifth year of repayment.

¶The bill raises the ceiling on student grants from $2,100 to $2,300 annually, with the total amount available increasing from $3.6 billion to $3.9 billion in the next fiscal year.

¶The ceiling on cumulative undergraduate guaranteed student loans would rise from $12,500 to $17,250 a student, but the pool of money available would drop from $3.2 billion to $3.1 billion.

Many House members noted that the bill took a major step toward recognizing the population shift on many campuses as older, nontraditional students return to school. The measure makes people who attend school less than half-time eligible for aid and provides $10 million to make child care services available to disadvantaged students.

BLACK TIE REQUIRED FOR DINNER & DANCING?

2 Sides Wrap Up Arguments Over Textbooks in Tennessee

GREENEVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 24 (AP) — Arguments ended today in a lawsuit that pits seven fundamentalist families against their school board and the state over the content of textbooks.

On the steps of the Federal District Courthouse after closing arguments today, one parent, Vicki Frost, appealed for prayers to guide Judge Thomas Hull in deciding the case.

"I encourage Christians everywhere to hold Judge Hull up in their prayers," Mrs. Frost said.

She and 13 other parents in rural East Tennessee have objected to the Hawkins County schools' use of the 1983 Holt, Rinehart & Winston readers on the ground that they included pacifist, magical, feminist and anti-Christian themes.

Parents Seek Separate Classes

The parents want alternative classes using religiously acceptable books.

Judge Hull, who presided over eight days of testimony in July, has given himself 30 days to decide the civil case, which both sides predict will be appealed.

Both sides have likened the case to the 1925 trial in Dayton, Tenn., where a biology instructor, John T. Scopes, was found guilty of teaching evolution.

The Hawkins County case is the first of several such challenges to public school curriculums. Another is set for trial Oct. 6 in Mobile, Ala., where a Federal judge has been asked to replace textbooks that plaintiffs say promote "secular humanism."

According to fundamentalist doctrine, secular humanism is a view that elevates transient human values over eternal, spiritual values.

In the closing arguments today, Timothy Dyk, the attorney for the school system, warned Judge Hull that a verdict in favor of the parents could be the end of public education.

Families See a Fairness Issue

Michael Farris, attorney for the families, said it was unfair to Christian students in the county to be forced either to violate their beliefs or transfer to private school.

Mr. Farris said the state was seeking to limit academic freedom. "If we win this case, there will be more, not less, books in public schools," he said.

The state, which interceded on behalf of Hawkins County, contended that a separate class for religious objectors would violate the United States Constitution's prohibition against the establishment of a religion.

WASHINGTON TALK

Briefing

Nixon's Advice

With relations with the Soviet Union at a critical juncture amid talk of a summit meeting and the matter of Nicholas S. Daniloff, President Reagan is quietly seeking the counsel of a man even many Democrats concede probably knows more about the Soviet mind than most other living Americans: former President Richard M. Nixon.

Mr. Reagan telephoned Mr. Nixon most recently last Sunday and spent an hour disucussing summit issues and the arrest of Mr. Daniloff. Moreover, Mr. Nixon has written an extensive memorandum to Mr. Reagan detailing his recent trip to the Soviet Union, his meeting with Mikhail S. Gorbachev and Mr. Nixon's views on arms control.

So far, according to a source familiar with the matter, the memorandum has been read in the White House only by Mr. Reagan, Nancy Reagan and the chief of staff, Donald T. Regan.

Discontents

For some time now there has been subdued but growing evidence that all is not well in the Foreign Service. For the most part, dissatisfaction has been limited to hallway mutterings and an occasional internal memo. Career and would-be career officers complain privately of stagnating opportunities for advancement and a reluctance of professionals to challenge what they see as political decisions.

The mounting dissatisfaction comes against the background of a little-noticed survey of officers in the service conducted by The Foreign Service Journal, the publication of the American Foreign Service Association, which did not necessarily endorse the findings.

Among 226 respondents to a questionnaire, only 14 percent said they would advise new entrants to view the Foreign Service as a lifetime career. One respondent is quoted as saying: "I would, and do, discourage young inquirers. The career service is finished as a collective body."

Moreover, only 28 percent of respondents saw the service as "a lifetime commitment," 55 percent viewed it as a long-term job to be followed by another and 16 percent saw it as either a limited career or "an experiment."

En Garde for Moiseyev

With large numbers of Russians, both Communists and expatriate anti-Communists, expected to be in the audience, the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts took strong measures at the opening of the Moiseyev Dance Company to assure that there would be no repetition of the tear-gas incident that shattered the proceedings when the Russian troupe appeared at the Met in New York.

Four metal detectors of the kind used at airports were set in place at the entrances. The electronic searches delayed the sellout crowd of 2,300 for 25 minutes. Most of those in line took the delay in good nature, but one of those in attendance, himself highly familiar with security measures, observed that some explanation would have helped. "A lot of people figured the President was attending," he said. A Kennedy Center spokesman, Laura Longley, said the precaution was taken because of the incident at the Metropolitan.

Access to Reading

Americans for Constitutional Freedom has commissioned a survey of American attitudes toward access to reading material, and it says the results are "a pleasant surprise."

Among about a thousand respondents to a national survey by the New York polling concern of Penn & Schoen, 84 percent said they felt Americans should have access to "all books and magazines judged to be legal." Among those who identified themselves as "born again Christians," 74 percent said Americans should have such access.

Among specific publications, 98 percent of respondents felt access to Time, Newsweek, Life and Sports Illustrated should be totally unrestricted, 90 percent felt that way about Cosmopolitan, 72 percent about Rolling Stone, 65 percent about Playboy and 61 percent about Penthouse.

Americans for Constitutional Freedom was formed in June, just before the release of the Attorney General's report on pornography. It is made up of trade associations in the publishing industry. The survey will be made public here today.

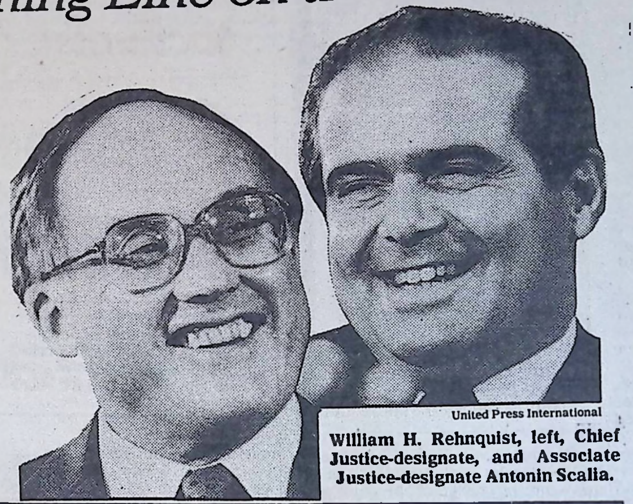
The Morning Line on the Bench, as Revised

By STUART TAYLOR Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24 — The Supreme Court's internal chemistry will doubtless be affected by the changes in membership that the Senate has approved, scholars agree, but its ideological balance is unlikely to shift dramatically unless another aging member steps down.

While public attention has focused on the elevation of Associate Justice William H. Rehnquist to become the 16th Chief Justice, the more important new ingredient in the Court's chemistry, many experts agree, is the appointment of Judge Antonin Scalia as Associate Justice.

"I'm told, and I don't know this from experience, that he is most dangerous when he is most ingratiating, and that he has a great ability to persuade one to his point of view," Associate Justice Harry A. Blackmun said of Judge Scalia in an informal talk in July to a group of Federal judges. "Well, we'll see."



United Press International

By all accounts, Judge Scalia will bring to the Court both an uncommonly potent intellect and a winning personality, making him a formidable ally for Justice Rehnquist. Both men, who will be sworn in Friday, are fervent conservatives who share the Reagan Administration's views of almost all politically charged issues, from affirmative action and abortion to prayer in schools.

'Creation Science' an Issue

Among the issues that the reconstituted Court will face in the term beginning Oct. 6 are state-mandated teaching of "creation science" as a counterweight to the teaching of evolution, racial disparities in death sentencing and, once again, affirmative action in the workplace.

The reason no immediate shift in the Court's direction is expected is that, except for Justice Rehnquist, Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, who is retiring, has long been the Court's most consistent conservative.

"In the vast bulk of the ideologically charged cases, Judge Scalia's vote will be a functional substitute for Chief Justice Burger's vote, so the outcomes of cases should not be affected," said Prof. Burt Neuborne of New York University Law School.

"But there's more to the Supreme Court than short-term voting patterns," added Professor Neuborne, who recently stepped down as the American Civil Liberties Union's legal director.

> 'The center held generally. But it bled.'
> — Associate Justice Blackmun

"When you add a judge of Scalia's intellect and vigor to the Court, you add a powerful voice for his convictions, and I suspect that over time he may influence the votes of the middle of the Court."

The Justices in the Court's middle, especially Lewis F. Powell Jr. and Sandra Day O'Connor, have held the balance of power on many issues, sometimes siding with Justice Rehnquist and sometimes with the Court's liberal wing.

Pragmatism Seen in Decisions

In recent years these shifting coalitions have produced decisions notable less for theoretical consistency than for pragmatism, moderation and continuity.

Conservatives hope this will change now with the new injection of intellectual vigor and youth from Judge Scalia, 50 years old, and the elevation of Justice Rehnquist, 61, who is widely considered a more consistent, persuasive and determined advocate of conservative views than the 79-year-old Chief Justice Burger.

Justice Rehnquist's new powers will include the right to preside at the Court's conferences, to assign opinions when he is in the majority and, in subtle ways, to reward his allies and punish his adversaries among the eight Associate Justices.

But he will still have only one vote, and his fiercely independent colleagues are unlikely to abandon the positions they have staked out on major issues.

'They Are Prima Donnas'

"They are prima donnas, there's no question about that," Justice Harry A. Blackmun said of the Court's members in a speech in July to a group of Federal appellate judges, according to a report in the National Law Journal. "You remember Holmes described them as nine scorpions in a bottle. That's a pretty good description."

Justice Blackmun added: "I think the center held generally this year. But it bled a lot. And it needs more troops. Where it's going to get them, I don't know."

The Court's direction could shift dramatically to the right if President Reagan got a chance to replace with another conservative any of the Court's four oldest members. Justice Blackmun is 77, Justice Powell 79, and Justices William J. Brennan Jr. and Thurgood Marshall, who hold down the Court's liberal wing, are 80 and 78 respectively.

Together with Justice John Paul Stevens, 66, they have been the five supporters of broad abortion rights, for example. If any was replaced by an opponent of legal abortion, it might open the way for the Court to restrict or even possibly to abandon its protection of abortion.

Illinois Case Is Pending

The Court has not yet agreed to review any abortion cases in the coming term. But it has before it an appeal of a lower Federal court decision that struck down an Illinois law that required minors seeking abortions to wait 24 hours after informing their parents.

The whole question of separation of church and state is one area in which Judge Scalia may have a chance to nudge the Court's current members in a new direction, according to Mr. Neuborne and other experts.

Many scholars agree that the Court's decisions interpreting the prohibition of "establishment of religion" have been so confusing and difficult to reconcile that its whole approach, built upon a "three-part test" enunciated in 1971 by Chief Justice Burger, may be ripe for re-evaluation.

More Leeway Is a Possibility

Some members of the Court have suggested the same. "This is an area where we have not done well," Justice Blackmun said in his speech in July. Justice Rehnquist has argued forcefully that the Constitution does not require a "wall of separation" between church and state or governmental neutrality toward religion, as the majority has sometimes held.

Judge Scalia's writings as a law professor, before President Reagan named him to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, suggest he will join with Justice Rehnquist in seeking more leeway for governments to assist parochial schools and other religious organizations.

That is not necessarily to say that either of them would go so far as to uphold, for example, Louisiana's pending appeal of a lower Federal court ruling that struck down a law requiring that "creation science" be taught in any public school that teaches the theory of evolution.

The lower court ruled the law an unconstitutional effort to promote a religious belief in the Biblical account of creation, misleadingly disguised by its drafters and the state as a scientific theory.

However the case comes out, it will be closely watched for any signs of a move away from the strict neutrality toward religion that a narrow majority of the Court has previously enforced.

Bills Emerge That Aren't for Passing

By STEVEN V. ROBERTS

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24 — The end of a Congressional session is a strange season, when normal rules of legislative behavior do not always apply. Bills can be brought up for a whole range of reasons, and passing them is not always the main goal.

Take a measure that would alter the system of compensating people who are injured by defective products. It has almost no chance of completing the Congressional steeplechase before the legislators quit for the year, probably by the end of next week. Yet it reached the Senate floor on Tuesday, and on Thursday, a vote is scheduled on a motion to end a filibuster against the bill.

Why bother?

Politics, for one thing. The issue of product liability has become a major concern to voters. The rapid increase in damage awards to injured consumers has caused the insurance industry to cut back severely on certain kinds of coverage and suddenly Members of Congress are deluged with complaints about a problem that is "changing the American way of life," as Senator Bob Kasten, the Wisconsin Republican who sponsored the legislation, put it.

'Mailboxes Are Filled'

"Now our mailboxes are filled with letters from large and small manufacturers," Mr. Kasten said, "who cannot find insurance for their products, consumers who cannot purchase needed medicines at reasonable prices and product sellers who are dragged into every suit against a manufacturer even when there was clearly no negligence or fault on their part."

Given the outcry, many lawmakers want the chance to vote on the issue before the election. They do not necessarily want to pass a bill; they just want to be able to go home and say they did something about a pressing problem.

"At this moment," Senator Kasten conceded, "there is some politics going on. Sure."

In particular, there is some politics going on in Wisconsin, where Mr. Kasten is locked in a close fight for re-election. Since Bob Dole, the majority leader, controls the Senate schedule, he is able to call up measures that provide a public relations bonanza for Mr. Kasten and other Republican incumbents that no Democratic challenger can hope to match.

'Using the Senate as a Forum'

"Dole is very skillfully and aggressively using the Senate as a forum for Republican candidates," said Senator George J. Mitchell of Maine, head of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee.

Senator Kasten was especially pleased Tuesday when he won an initial test vote in the Senate and attracted the attention of Wisconsin reporters. "This was a good day for me in terms of politics," he said.

In fact, he added that Democrats were circulating on the Senate floor, urging colleagues to vote against the Kasten's measure and thus deprive him of a "political victory."

Adding to the political intrigue, Mr. Kasten asserted, is the Association of Trial Lawyers of America, the leading opponents of the product liability bill. They are contributing heavily to his Democratic opponent, Ed Garvey, Senator Kasten said.

But as Senator Paul Simon, an Illinois Democrat, noted, the product liability fight really involves "two giant forces in collision": the trial lawyers, who oppose the Kasten bill and the insurance industry, which supports it. And Wisconsin is home to several large insurance companies that certainly look with favor on Senator Kasten's efforts.

> 'There is some politics going on. Sure.'
> — Bob Kasten of Wisonsin

Politics aside, the product liability issue demonstrates the perils of trying to push a major bill through Congress in the waning days of a session. Even though only a small minority of the Senate oppose the measure, the power of such a minority grows considerably as the days dwindle.

With legislators eager to end the session and go home to campaign, just the hint of a filibuster is usually enough to throttle a bill and force the leaders to pull it off the schedule.

"This is the season when people are able to frustrate the majority because of time," Mr. Kasten said.

'Ill-Advised,' Simpson Says

But opponents of the product liability bill say that if they did not use all the tricks in the book, the bill might get whipped through Congress in the adjournment frenzy, without the debate it deserves. Alan K. Simpson, a Wyoming Republican, said, "I believe we are surely ill-advised to consider this very significant piece of legislation in haste in these final, hectic days of the 99th Congress."

In arguing for delay, Senator Ernest F. Hollings, a South Carolina Democrat, said that the claims of hardship put forward by the insurance industry were intended to "bamboozle" the Senate and must be examined more closely.

A former trial lawyer, Mr. Hollings accused the bill's supporters of engaging in "political hit-and-run driving." Their motto, he remarked, is to "make headlines and not headway."

Both sides, however, are already preparing the ground for a renewed battle. Officially, all bills that do not pass before Congress adjourns are dead, and must be reintroduced in the next session. But in fact, many legislative efforts take years to reach completion, and the more diligent legislators are laying the groundwork now for the 100th Congress.

"The further we go now," said Mr. Kasten, "the further along we will be next year."

A letter in the new issue of The New England Journal of Medicine from three Cincinnati physicians, Robert J. Toltzis, David J. Morton and Myron C. Gerson, describing an exotic hazard of a common treadmill heart test in which the patient is first injected with the radioisotope thallium-201.

We wish to report a side effect of exercise testing with thallium-201 not generally known to physicians, which may result in acute embarrassment for the patient. Over the past few months, in two separate incidents, two of our patients have set off the security alarm system while attempting to enter the White House for the public tour and each was briefly detained by the Secret Service. Both patients had undergone exercise-treadmill testing with thallium-201 within four days of their White House tours. Neither patient triggered airport security devices (metal detectors) on their trips from Cincinnati to the District of Columbia. However, both were stopped by the Secret Service when they entered the White House grounds because it was found that they emitted gamma radiation. Each was detained until the cause of the breach of security could be established.

Drawings by Tom Bloom

Thallium-201 has a half-life of 72 hours and a 2.5-mCi dose is used in our laboratory for routine exercise testing. When informing patients of the side effects of thallium-201, perhaps a warning against visiting the White House soon after the test should be included.

Senate, 99-0, Backs Highway Bill; Measure Now Going to Conferees

By REGINALD STUART

United Press International

Senator Steven D. Symms, Republican of Idaho, is a leader of proponents of raising the speed limit.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24 — The Senate today unanimously adopted legislation setting a ceiling of $64.8 billion over the next four years on Federal spending on highway, bridge and mass transit programs and allowing the states to raise the speed limit on some rural highways. The vote was 99 to 0.

The Senate joined the House in rejecting broad changes in transportation financing sought by the Reagan Administration, particularly a proposal to combine highway and mass transit programs into single block grants. However, the Senate bill differs considerably from the House bill, which sets a ceiling of $90 billion over five years and contains no provision for increasing the speed limit.

Those differences and of other issues Senate members decided not to debate will have to be ironed out when House and Senate conferees meet to resolve the two bills.

Passage of the Senate measure, which was debated for 12 hours over two days, came after members voted 60 to 32 to delete language that would have allowed state and local governments to refuse to award transportation contracts to companies that do business with South Africa as a protest against its policy of racial separation.

Opposition to Proposal

The South Africa proposal, sponsored by Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan, Democrat of New York, drew sharp criticism from Republicans, who threatened to vote against the bill if the language was not eliminated. They argued that the proposal had the effect of giving local and state governments the right to set foreign policy.

Legislative observers said also that a transportation bill including the South Africa language almost certainly would have been vetoed by President Reagan.

The speed limit provision of the bill, adopted as an amendment by a vote of 55 to 36 Tuesday night, allows states to increase the speed limit along rural sections of the Interstate Highway System to 65 miles an hour from 55 miles an hour. The states would decide which sections should have the higher limit.

The vote to increase the speed limit, spearheaded by lawmakers from Western and rural states, marked the first time either house of Congress had voted for a return to higher speed limits since they were reduced in 1974 from as high as 80 miles an hour in some states to reduce fuel consumption.

Proponents of raising the speed limit, led by Senator Steven D. Symms, Republican of Idaho, argued that flexibility could be worked into the speed laws without compromising safety. Those against the change, led by Senator Robert T. Stafford, Republican of Vermont, who is chairman of the Senate panel in charge of the transportation bill, argued that more lives would be lost by increasing the speed limit and that fuel conservation efforts would suffer.

Alignment on Speed Limit

Nearly every lawmaker from the West voted for the speed limit change. It was opposed by the Senators from New York, New Jersey and Connecticut.

Other provisions in the Senate bill give states the freedom to use some of their interstate highway construction funds for building principal noninterstate highways and end a decades-old ban on the use of Federal highway funds to help construct toll roads.

In the House-Senate conference, the speed limit is expected to play a big role in deliberations. The House rejected a proposed increase in the speed limit by a 20-vote margin, and its representatives in conference are expected to fight to have the provision eliminated from any consensus bill.

In debate Tuesday night over the speed limit, lawmakers divided along regional and demographic lines.

Senator Symms, who offered a number of amendments to the bill, characterized the speed change as "a very modest proposal," saying, "We could in some cases improve safety by having a more flexible attitude."

He and others cited evidence that the driving public was increasingly ignoring the speed limit and several lawmakers, led by Senator Chic Hecht, Republican of Nevada, contended that speed limit matters were "strictly a states' rights issue."

House Passes Measure to Cut Deficit for '87 by $15.1 Billion

not the most glorious moment in the history of the budget process."

Representative Bill Frenzel, Republican of Minnesota, said the package aimed at cutting the deficit "with pencils instead of our knives," and Representative Willis D. Gradison Jr., Republican of Ohio, voiced the most common criticism, calling the package "blue smoke and mirrors."

Representative Jim Wright, Democrat of Texas, the House majority leader, also criticized the bill. He called the sale of assets "an act of desperation" that was "money robbed from succeeding years." Mr. Wright said private concerns would buy the loan portfolios only if they would make a profit, which the Government would lose out on.

Like other House members, Mr. Wright argued that Mr. Reagan's adamant refusal to raise taxes to reduce the deficit forced Congress to resort to the devices in the bill passed today so as to meet the requirements of the budget-balancing law.

The Law's Operation

The law, which was passed last year, requires that the deficit be reduced below $154 billion for 1987. If it is not, Congress must vote on cuts that would reduce the deficit to $144 billion. These spending cuts, half in the military, would be applied to all Federal programs except Social Security and a few others.

The current deficit projection for 1987, including assumed spending increases for new drug legislation and farm programs, is around $168 billion.

The House package's major differences with the Senate's are the items to which the Administration objects, including the unselective spending cut and the new customs fees. The House and the Senate both include basically the same revenue provisions, the same asset sales and the same bookkeeping devices. Among these are paying the final $680 million revenue-sharing installment to local governments on Sept. 30, rather that in the first week of October, so that it will be charged to the 1986 deficit, not 1987. Both plans also accelerate tax collections from 1988 into 1987 and count them as savings.

The deficit-reducing package is one of the three pieces of budget legislation near the top of the Congressional agenda before adjournment, scheduled early next month.

The second item is the $577 billion overall appropriation for 1987, which includes all 13 appropriation bills for the Government, including the Pentagon. Mr. Reagan has said he will veto this bill if it includes the House's provisions on arms control, which Mr. Reagan said Tuesday would undermine negotiations with the Soviet Union.

The House is scheduled to vote on its version of the overall appropriation Thursday. A last-gasp attempt by mayors and local leaders to save the revenue-sharing program through that bill failed tonight. Under pressure from Republicans and Democrats worried about the political consequences of a floor vote, the Democratic leadership dropped the $3.4 billion proposal.

The third piece of legislation would raise the ceiling on national debt so that the Treasury can continue borrowing to pay the Government's bills.

Major Provisions of Package

Among the major provisions of the House's deficit-reducing package are these:

¶Sales of Federal assets totaling $8.7 billion, including the sale of Conrail for $2.1 billion. Sales of loan portfolios include rural housing ($1.405 billion), rural development ($1 billion), Export-Import Bank ($2.81 billion), small business ($850 million) and college housing ($579 million).

¶Permission for cooperatives that borrowed money at high interest from the Rural Electrification Administration to pay off the loans early. This will provide $1.095 billion in revenue from accelerated loan payoffs, while the Government will lose some expected revenue from foregone interest payments in the future.

¶User fees totaling $2.102 billion. Of the total, $1.83 billion is from a new fee on commercial imports, one-half of 1 percent, to become effective Dec. 1. The Administration says that the cost of customs services is only one-sixth that amount and that therefore the fee would effectively be an import tax, violating international trade agreements. The other user fees are for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

¶Other revenue increases totaling $3.991 billion. As in the Senate plan, they include $2.4 billion from enhanced enforcement of tax laws by hiring new auditors for the Internal Revenue Service. Another $846 million is from increased fines and penalties. The rest, as with the Senate, is from accelerated deposit of excise taxes and Social Secuirty payroll taxes, and a new tax on port use that is supported by the Administration.

¶Medicare spending increases of $1.5 billion, about twice the level in the Senate. Medicare patients, who must pay the first $492 of their hospital costs, would be treated more generously. This deductible, which is to rise to $572 next Tuesday under current law, would be held to $500 under the House bill, while the Senate would raise it to $520. The House would also allow expansion of the health care coverage of Medicaid, which covers the poor, and Supplemental Security Income, which covers the elderly poor and disabled, to all such people whose income is below the poverty line.

The $1 billion spending cut would be applied across the board except for Social Security and a few other social programs. The cut is in spending, so the actual reduction in appropriations, which normally are not all spent in one year, would be larger. The Pentagon budget would be $285 billion, below the 1986 level.

Driesell Talks Reported

Edward Bennett Williams, the attorney for Charles (Lefty) Driesell, has reportedly discussed with the University of Maryland Chancellor conditions under which the coach of the Terrapins may leave his job in the wake of the controversy over the death of the basketball star Len Bias. Williams, told Chancellor John Slaughter about three weeks ago that the coach wants to keep his job but might leave in return for a sizeable financial settlement, according to The Baltimore Sun. That settlement would reportedly involve a cash payment equal to Driesell's income. In addition to his $85,000-a-year salary from the university, Driesell annually earns about $100,000 from a shoe contract, another $30,000 from his summer camp and $50,000 to $60,000 from his television and radio appearances.

Since the death of Bias from cocaine intoxication on June 19, Driesell and the team have been scrutinized intensely. Arthur Marshall, the Prince Georges County State Attorney, who presented evidence to the grand jury that indicted three of Bias's teammates, has said Driesell suggested that an assistant coach remove items from the dormitory room where Bias collapsed. The grand jury decided not to indict Driesell on potential obstruction of justice charges. Slaughter has said he would delay making any decisions about Driesell's future until he sees a special grand jury report on the university's athletic department and the report of a campus task force reviewing academic performance of Maryland athletes. Williams was unavailable for comment, but Slaughter confirmed a meeting with Williams while declining to discuss details. Slaughter said that Francis Stark, retired provost of the university's College of Agricultural and Life Sciences, has been interviewing people on campus with knowledge about the basketball program, and Stark said he and Brian Darmody, a university attorney, were conducting an investigation, But both also declined to comment on specifics.

Campbell Released

The Pittsburgh Steelers cut one of their three quarterbacks yesterday, waiving Scott Campbell, a seventh-round draft choice from Purdue in 1984. The release made room for Earnest Jackson, a running back, who signed late on Tuesday. During his three-year career, Campbell completed 51 out of 115 passes and had 5 touchdowns and 7 interceptions. His departure leaves the Steelers with Mark Malone and Bubby Brister, a rookie third-round pick out of Northeast Louisiana.

Packer on Reserve

Doctors have told Tim Lewis that he cannot risk another blow like the one he suffered against the Bears on Monday night so the Green Bay Packers' cornerback will be placed on injured reserve for the rest of the year and will then retire. The 24-year-old Lewis, a fourth-year pro out of the University of Pittsburgh, jammed his neck when he butted heads with Willie Gault, a wide receiver. He temporarily lost feeling in his arms after the tackle and was taken off the field in a stretcher. Doctors said that Lewis has an abnormally narrow spinal column and that paralysis could result from another such incident.

Coach Suspended

Cedrick Hardman, a former all-pro lineman, has been suspended from his position as head coach at Laguna Beach (Calif.) High School after being arrested on charges of cocaine possession. He was was stopped for speeding last Saturday on Laguna Canyon Road and officers noticed a small bag of white powder in his briefcase, according to Sgt. Ray Lerdle. When officers attempted to search his car, Hardman resisted and it took three officers and Mace to subdue him, according to the po was arrested but later relea own recognizance. The school rejected a bid by Hardman to on the job while participati drug-rehabilitation program man, 37, played 12 years league, 10 as defensive end San Francisco 49ers, going to Bowl in 1971 and 1975. He was to the Oakland Raiders before 1980 Super Bowl champion retired after the 1981 season Smith, superintendent of the Beach Unified School District, the school board voted Tues suspend Hardman without pa joined the high school staff assistant football coach in 198 was named head coach at the the 1985 season.

Today in Baseball

SEPT. 25

1934 — Eighteen-year-old Phil Cavarretta of the Chicago Cubs hit a home run for a 1-0 victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

1941 — Pete Reiser's homer and Whitlow Wyatt's five-hitter led the Brooklyn Dodgers over the Boston Braves 6-0 and clinched the first Dodger pennant in 21 years.

1956 — Sal Maglie of the Brooklyn Dodgers hurled a 5-0 no-hitter against the Philadelphia Phillies.

1960 — The New York Yankees clinched the American League pennant with a 4-3 victory over the Boston Red Sox. It was Casey Stengel's 10th and last pennant.

1965 — Satchel Paige, at 60, became the oldest person to play in the majors as he took the mound for Kansas City and pitched three scoreless innings over the Boston Red Sox. He gave up one hit to Carl Yastrzemski.

N.C.A.A. Will Implement Postseason Drug Testing

By IRVIN MOLOTSKY

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24 — The National Collegiate Athletic Association today disclosed that some athletes will be selected for drug testing on the basis of performance in 74 postseason championships and 19 football bowl games.

Walter Byers, the executive director of the sports organization, said, "This is substantially broader than most drug-testing programs that you read about, either in the Federal Government or in private business."

Some players will be selected for testing because they finished with high scores, played the most time or won events. In addition, some will be tested at random. Some will be tested before games and some afterward.

For example, in each football bowl game, 36 players will be tested. Of these, 22 will be those with the most playing time and 14 will be selected at random.

In both indoor and outdoor track, the first three finishers will be tested, plus two at random, in each event.

Performance To Be Factor

If the winner of an individual event is found to have used a drug on the proscribed list, that victory will be overturned. If a player on a team sport is found to have used such a drug, Byers said, "The team's accomplishment would be vacated."

The announcement today represented implementation of a policy approved Jan. 14 at the N.C.A.A.'s annual convention in New Orleans. It was to have gone into effect on Aug. 1, but that goal was not met.

The banned drugs include not only illegal "street" drugs, such as marijuana, cocaine and heroin, but also legal substances, such as anabolic steroids, that the N.C.A.A. says are dangerous.

Byers said the N.C.A.A. would spend $950,000 in the first year for the testing program plus $450,000 for an associated educational program, and a capital expenditure of $2 million to allow testing laboratories to purchase additional equipment.

Asked why the association was concentrating on postseason games, Byers said that conferences could approve drug testing during the seasons, as could individual colleges and universities. The postseason testing, he said, would be beneficial to the athletes and have "a positive impact on the college and high school community."

Death of Bias Cited

Recent deaths among athletes have been linked to drug abuse. One athlete, Len Bias, died just after he signed with the Boston Celtics after starring at the University of Maryland.

Since Bias's death occurred well after the season, it is not likely that his use of cocaine would have been spotted had the program been in ef-

A Rookie Stops Mets Again

By CRAIG WOLFF

Special to The New York Times

CHICAGO, Sept. 24 — Come see the showboat Mets, see the big, brass team from New York dance and hug and outmug and overpower everyone in the way.

Ball parks are filled and bristling when the Mets are in town. That's the popular thinking because the Mets have had more than 100 such days and they will have more. But first. . . . First the Mets must confront the present and trudge through a few dreary days at empty ball parks.

A misty rain washed Wrigley Field through the morning today. Fog settled in early. This was not weather in which fans like to watch baseball, even to see the Mets. And besides, the Mets alone can not make up for one basic fact: Hardly anyone wants to see the Cubs anymore.

Cubs 8 Mets 2

That is how the Mets, the most talked-about team in baseball, came to play in front of their smallest crowd of the season, only 6,468 spectators. A sparse, uninspired crowd here today resulted in a rather uninspired performance by the Mets. They lost to the Cubs, 8-2, and afterward Gary Carter remarked, "It wasn't exactly an uplifting day."

And his manager, Dave Johnson, added: "It doesn't matter at all."

Obviously, the Mets have already begun the wait and the preparing for Oct. 8 when they will meet the Astros in Houston for the first game of the National League Championship series. The Astros, as play began today, owned a magic number of two for clinching the Western Division title.

The Cubs thrashed the Mets, scoring once in the second inning, once in the fifth, five more times in the seventh and once in the eighth, piling up 15 hits. A little-known pitcher, Drew Hall, held the Mets to six hits and became the second rookie pitcher to gain his first major-league victory

Jim Deshaies of the Astros as he set strikeout record.

Astro Rookie Makes Mark

HOUSTON

Alan Ashby, who catches for the Houston Astros, was suddenly in the mood to drop a few names. "I started with some of the old-timers," he said. "Walter Johnson, Cy Young. Then I moved on to guys like Koufax, Ryan and Seaver. But he just sat there, dead-panned and straight-faced. I don't know if he was listening to me or not."

Jim Deshaies may not have been listening. But he knew. No one had to tell him that he had accomplished a feat that none of baseball's pre-eminent strikeout artists, past or present, had done. The 6-foot-4-inch rookie left-hander, who had just been returned to the startling rotation by Manager Hal Lanier, struck out the first eight batters he faced in the Astros' 4-0 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers Tuesday night to set a modern major-league record.

The major-league record of nine consecutive strikeouts at the start of a game was established in 1884 by Michael Welch of the New York Giants. The record for consecutive strikeouts at any point in a game is 10, set by Tom Seaver on April 22, 1970.

"What we saw tonight was a real rarity, and I don't know if people realize that," said Nolan Ryan, baseball's career strikeout leader with 4,259. "I don't care if it's eight strikeouts in the middle of a game, at the start of a game, or what. The chances of it happening again are pretty slim."

Deshaies, who is from Massena, N.Y., surpassed the modern record of seven strikeouts at the start of a game — established by Joe Cowley of the Chicago White Sox on May 28 this season — by fanning, in order of disappearance: Steve Sax, Reggie Williams, Enos Cabell, Pedro Guerrero, Alex Treviño, Jeff Hamilton, Dave Anderson and José González. All of the victims went down swinging, usually at Deshaies's high fastball, except for Guerrero, who fouled off nine pitches before a Deshaies change-up low on the outside corner left him open-mouthed, flat-footed and out. "He threw well," said Anderson. "But we were swinging at everything. There was no trick to it."

Following the record-breaking strikeout against González, Bill Doran, the Astros' second baseman, asked

Knicks Have Eyes on Mullin

But Price Is High

By SAM GOLDAPER

The Knicks want Chris Mullin, but the Golden State Warriors' demands plus salary cap restrictions, have put major stumbling blocks in front of the trade that the two teams have been discussing since June.

"I don't think there are serious intentions on the part of the Warriors to trade Mullin," said Scotty Stirling, the Knicks' general manager yesterday. "When teams don't really want to make a trade, they usually make the price too high."

The Knicks' latest offer for the 6-foot-7-inch former St. John's all-American, is Darrell Walker. The Warriors, who started discussions with the Knicks before last June's college draft, at first expressed interest in Bill Cartwright. When the Knicks said that the 7-1 center was unavailable, the talks shifted to Mullin. The Warriors' asking price was Walker and the Knicks' top draft choice in 1987. George Karl, who acts both as the Golden State coach and general manager, has not wavered from his position.

The Knicks, according to a source close to the talks, are willing to part with either the 6-3 Walker or the top draft pick, but not both.

"What really interested us even more than Walker," said a Warrior source, "is the Knicks' No. 1 pick. If we don't get both, the trade will never get done."

Karl, who has been conducting daily workouts with Mullin and five Warrior rookies, said, "Chris has value not only in the New York but in the N.B.A."

Even if the two teams were to work out their differences, which appears unlikely, the trade would run into trouble with the provisions of the salary cap.

Since the Knicks are over the cap, the trade would not be approved by the National Basketball Association unless Mullin renegotiated the four-year $2.2 contract he signed last season after he was the seventh player selected in the draft.

According to the terms of his contract, Mullin will be paid $350,000 for the upcoming season. However, the N.B.A., which prorates contracts for

Gastineau Unhappy Over His Sack Total

Credited for Only ½ So Far

By GERALD ESKENAZI

Special to The New York Times

HEMPSTEAD, L.I., Sept. 24 — Mark Gastineau has been churlish lately. When he isn't sacking people, he is moody and even refuses interviews.

Today, however, he contended that his problem has been a groin strain that has limited him to only half a sack this season through three games.

To the flamboyant, egocentric player who holds the National Football League record for career sacks (averaging better than one a start), as well as sacks in one season (22), this season's number is bothersome.

"The only problem I've had is that I can't make the same moves," Gastineau said. "I'm afraid it'll pull again or I'll have to go through the same problems I had before. Subconsciously, it's in the back of my mind."

Gastineau has had stretches in the past when the team could compensate for his lessened quarterback-chasing. But this is not the time, even with the weak Colts (0-3) looming next Sunday at Indianapolis.

"My play against the run has been excellent," said Gastineau. "But this is what I'm paid for and people expect it. I put myself into situations and I put myself into bad moods when it doesn't work."

The Jets have had enormous problems on pass coverage. The combined rankings of the three quarterbacks they faced this year have produced a rating of 114.2, by far the highest against any team in the league.

Besides the sack that Gastineau shared with Barry Bennett, the Jets have produced only four other sacks this season.

According to Gastineau, he has lost a step — "the step I would need to make the inside move. A couple of times I went after Marino. If it was in the days I was healthy I would have caught him from behind."

Gastineau suffered the groin injury against the Giants in the exhibition game on Aug. 23. It bothered him in the season opener against Buffalo.

Still, he was able to practice full-tilt for the Dolphins game, yet did not get a sack. Coach Joe Walton, though, said that Gastineau had nine "pressures."

Walton also offered a reason for the nonsack production: The Jets haven't enjoyed a big lead.

"We haven't really jumped out ahead of anybody the first three games, and as a result we haven't turned loose," Walton said.

Bud Carson, the Jets' defensive coordinator, said the Jets' problems

Griffin's Home Run Leads A's

OAKLAND, Calif., Sept. 24 (AP) — Alfredo Griffin of Oakland hit a two-run homer with two outs in the seventh inning today as the A's defeated the Chicago White Sox, 4-2, to win their fourth straight game.

Joe Cowley (11-10), who pitched a no-hitter for Chicago in his last outing against California, allowed only three hits over six and two-thirds innings, but all three were home runs.

With the White Sox leading, 2-0, in the fourth, Carney Lansford and Dave Kingman hit consecutive homers to tie the game.

José Canseco drew a leadoff walk in the seventh, and two outs later, Griffin hit a homer off Cowley to give Chicago its fifth straight loss.

Steve Ontiveros (2-2) pitched one and two-thirds innings and did not allow a hit in relief of Curt Young, the starter, who gave up seven hits in six innings.

Jay Howell pitched the final two-thirds of an inning for his 15th save.

Kingman hit an opposite-field shot for his 34th homer of the year, tying him with Jesse Barfield for the American League lead.

Chicago took a 2-0 lead in the first inning on an r.b.i. double by Harold Baines and Ivan Calderon's r.b.i. single.

Baseball

Tuesday Night

Reds 6, Giants 5

CINCINNATI (UPI) — Kurt Stillwell scored Ron Oester from second base on a single with two outs in the seventh inning to break a 2-2 tie.

With one out in the Reds' seventh, Oester doubled to left off Mark Davis (4-7). After Dave Concepcion struck out, Stillwell singled to left off Frank Williams to drive in the go-ahead run.

Tom Browning (14-13) surrendered four hits and no earned runs in the first seven innings to get the victory.

Brewers 8, Red Sox 5

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Rick Manning hit a three-run homer and Paul Molitor went 3 for 4 with two runs batted in for the Brewers.

Boston's magic number to clinch its first division title in 11 years remained at three because the Yankees and Blue Jays, tied for second place, both won.

Tim Leary (10-12) gave up eight hits and four runs in five innings for his first victory since Aug. 12.

Indians 5, Angels 2

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Pat Tabler doubled home the tiebreaking run in the eighth inning as Cleveland defeated California behind Greg Swindell's four-hitter.

Mel Hall singled off Mike Witt (18-9) and scored to break a 2-2 tie when Tabler doubled into the left-field corner.

Swindell (4-1), walked two and struck out five in his first complete game. The left-hander, who was an all-American at the University of Texas, has won four straight since losing in his major league debut on Aug. 22 to Boston, a game that ended with a score of 24-5.

Blue Jays 6, Tigers 3

DETROIT (AP) — A home run by Jesse Barfield and a two-run double By Tony Fernandez sparked a four-run ninth inning as Toronto rallied.

Mark Eichhorn (13-5) pitched three and one-third innings of two-hit relief, striking out six and walking one. Tom Henke pitched the ninth for his 24th save.

Righetti Wins as Streak Ends

By MURRAY CHASS

Special to The New York Times

BALTIMORE, Sept. 24 — Cal Ripken jolted Dave Righetti out of his dream of perfection Tuesday night with a game-tying, save-squandering home run in the ninth inning. Righetti, though, rebounded and helped the Yankees beat the Baltimore Orioles, 5-3, in 10 innings.

"It was a heckuva shot," Righetti said of Ripken's towering home run into the left-field stands on his first pitch of the game, "one of the hardest hits I've ever given up."

Righetti, the No. 1 relief pitcher in the major leagues, had not failed in a save situation since July 1. He had succeeded in 24 successive games and raised his total saves to 41, four hort of the major league record.

He was disappointed that he let lo. 42 get away, but he was grateful that the Yankees rallied for two runs in the 10th. The first scored on a wild pitch by Brad Havens, and the second on Wayne Tolleson's single.

The victory kept the Yankees in a second-place tie with the Toronto Blue Jays, both nine games behind the Boston Red Sox, who lost to Milwaukee. Now the earliest the Yankees can be eliminated from the American League East race is Friday. It will take a combination of Boston victories and Yankee losses totaling three.

The batting race, on the other hand, will go on. Don Mattingly reached a couple of new plateaus, but he did it with only one single in five times at bat while Wade Boggs of Boston was collecting four hits in five tries. That enabled Boggs to retake the lead with a .3502 average to .3497 for Mattingly.

Mattingly's third-inning single extended his consecutive-game hitting streak to 22 games, the longest in the majors this season, and raised his season hit total to 221, the second most in Yankee history to the 231 that Earle Combs had in 1927.

The game also featured a double protest on the same play, but a double protest neither manager planned to pursue. The Yankees, of course, won the game, and Earl Weaver, the Baltimore manager, acknowledged later that the umpires made the correct call on the play, in which Dave Winfield struck John Stefero, the Orioles' catcher, on the back of the head with a hard backswing after he missed a pitch.

Ripken did not miss Righetti's first pitch of the ninth inning, and the 3-2 lead the Yankes had grabbed in their half of the inning on Tolleson's double and Willie Randolph's single became a 3-3 tie. The home run was the first off Righetti in 58⅔ innings, since George Bell hit a grand slam in Toronto June 20.

"You can't take saves for granted," said Righetti, who entered the game after Scott Nielsen allowed the Orioles two runs and six hits, including Fred Lynn's 23d home run, in eight innings. "I would liked to have kept the streak to the end. Why not? There's no set limit. No one can tell you when you have to stop. No one told DiMaggio. Willie Hernández had 32 saves in a row two years ago. Who's to say it had to end?"

Oil Can's Return

Associated Press

Boston's Dennis (Oil Can) Boyd, "maturin' a little bit."

MILWAUKEE

"Watch it, 'Can," called Jim Rice, the Boston outfielder. The damp T-shirt he had just pulled off and tossed in the Red Sox clubhouse was about to land, not in the laundry bin, but on the head of Dennis (Oil Can) Boyd, who with eyes lowered, had walked by and intersected the plane of the flying T-shirt.

But the 'Can shook off the blow. For just the briefest moment Rice, the mighty outfielder, watched for the slight pitcher's reaction, for he has been a volatile individual, and had just been banged about by the Brewers.

Also still fresh in memory was Boyd's suspension by the ball club in July for his wild outburst in the clubhouse after he had learned that, despite an 11-5 record, he had not been selected for the American League All-Star team.

Following a two-week enforced layoff, in which in a Boston hospital he had undergone therapy and tests, including drug tests that apparently proved negative, and after apologizing to his teammates for his clubhouse explosion, he returned to take his customary place in the Red Sox pitching rotation — winning four games and losing four.

But, perhaps as the corner of Rice's eye indicated, the length of Boyd's fuse was still uncertain.

Now, though, the 'Can was preoccupied, after having given up eight runs — five earned — in four and two-thirds innings, as the Red Sox lost to the Brewers in County Stadium Tuesday night, 8-5, and their magic number for clinching the American League East title was stalled at three.

Of the disappointing number of runs allowed, the most galling for Boyd was the first, when he walked in a run for, he said, the first time in his life. And this when the Red Sox were leading by 2-0 in the bottom of the fourth inning. The bases had been loaded with no outs after the previous batter hit an apparent double-play ground ball to the second baseman, Marty Barrett, who slipped on the wet turf, couldn't handle the ball, and was charged with an error.

Boyd had removed his hat, put it back on, and journeyed about the infield grass, in his nervous, active style, as he prepared to try to squelch the Brewer hitters.

He cranked up, his thin body seeming to move in sections, like an oil pump, and let fly. But, like Rice later, he wouldn't be on target. He walked in the run on four straight pitches, and this was followed by two sacrifice fly balls, and a bloop single, for four runs, before he got out of the inning.

"That shook me up, walking that batter," he would say later. "That's not me, not with my control. I just couldn't get my concentration back after that."

But it wasn't the error that threw him off, he would say. "It was a bobble, and that's part of the game," he said. "If a guy messes up by missing a cutoff throw, or something, that's different."

In the next inning, he gave up four more runs before John McNamara, the Red Sox manager, decided that Boyd needed deliverance, which came from the bullpen, in the form of Sammy Stewart.

In the locker room now, he nestled into a very small space on the long picnic bench that was filled with Red Sox players engaged in making trays of lasagna disappear. In an open jacket, Boyd scrunched down, looking almost shrunken beside a number of his muscular [illegible] a few beside Oil Can and spoke to him in what appeared a heart-to-heart between good friends, which they are.

He hadn't been talking to Boston reporters, and so there was a bit of a distance from them, as they plied the locker room for postgame information. But soon he would return to his locker and, seated on a stool, submit to a knot of reporters.

He said that he was feeling much better than before his suspension. "I've gained eight pounds, and I feel more relaxed," he said. "I'm up to 156½ — 157, my all-time high." He smiled, knowing that it's still not a lot on his 6-foot frame. "I've done it just by eatin' more — more food at meal time, and ice cream at night, and, oh yeah, some beer."

It was from his beer drinking as a teen-ager in Meridian, Miss., that he received the nickname Oil Can, the name given there for beer cans.

"Bruce Hurst said to me, 'Can, slug it, you can't carry all that weight,' " Boyd said. "That made me feel good. Like the other players care enough to notice me, and to kid me."

There was a moment when some of the players didn't want to see him again, after he had screamed obscenities at them in his rage at the All-Star slight. But they would come to believe that Boyd, a usually likable sort, was suffering from inner demons that probably had nothing personally to do with them. And then, when he is good, he is very good, especially on the mound, and a Boyd at the top of his game could help land them in a World Series.

He explained his feelings about the game, saying "I got my whip back," referring to his fast ball.

"I hadn't wanted to talk much because of all that went on in the past," he said. "I'm tryin' to block it out. [illegible] now? Because people had said that the 'Can only talked when things was goin' good. Well, they weren't so good tonight [illegible] added this one to his victory column by swiftly escaping from a two-on, no-out situation in the 10th.

Floyd Rayford and Lee Lacy singled in the 10th, and Lynn bunted, hoping to sacrifice them to third and second. However, Mattingly quickly fielded the bunt and threw to third for a forceout.

Then Righetti threw one pitch to Eddie Murray, and the Orioles' slugger, who had singled home a run in the sixth, grounded into a game-ending double play.

Winfield, who hit his 23d home run in the eighth, tying the game, 2-2, started the Yankees' half of the 10th with a single against Rich Bordi. One out later, Claudell Washington singled him to third. He scored on Havens's wild pitch. After Mike Pagliarulo was walked purposely and Mike Easler forced him at second, Tolleson singled against Odell Jones for the second run.

The double protest arose in the sixth inning. As Winfield swung and missed, Randolph broke for second, where he arrived safely because Winfield's bat had knocked Stefero to the ground. The umpires sent Randolph back to first. Lou Piniella, the Yankees' manager, argued that Randolph should be permitted to remain at second. Weaver contended that Winfield should be called out for interference.

4 Gold Medals Won by Chinese

SEOUL, South Korea, Sept. 24 (AP) — Li Ning of China became the first quadruple gold medalist in the 10th Asian Games today, winning the men's floor exercises and rings, as his compatriots collected seven other gymnastics medals.

Over all, the Chinese took five of six golds in men's individual gymnastics and three of four in the women's events.

In swimming, the Chinese thwarted the bid by Katsunori Fujiwara of Japan for a fourth gold by winning the men's 400-meter freestyle relay. China won four of the day's five swimming finals.

The youngest golfer in the Games, 16-year-old Ramon Brobio of the Philippines, defeated Kim Ki-Sub of South Korea, the oldest golfer at 47, in a playoff.

Astros' Rookie Makes Mark

Deshaies if he wanted the ball. "I didn't want to give it up, it was working too well," said Deshaies. "The idea of a foul ball never crossed my mind. I guess I was that out of it."

Nine straight seemed to be no problem with Dennis Powell, the starting pitcher, who had struck out five times in 12 times at bat this season, due up next. But the Dodger manager, Tommy Lasorda, whose team tumbled into a tie for last place in the National League West, was in no mood to see further insult added to his injury-riddled season, so he pinch-hit for Powell. Larry See, a .267-hitting infielder, extended the count to 1-2 before popping up to Doran for the final out of the inning.

See's pop-up might have marked the first time that an out by the opposition was booed. "Everybody was mad at me," Doran said with a smile. The jeers subsided quickly, however, giving way to a rousing ovation as Deshaies left the field. He tipped his hat to the crowd of 27,734 just before entering the dugout, where he took a seat not far from Ashby.

"Sure, I heard him, but I tried not to think about it that way," said Deshaies, referring to Ashby's mention of baseball's great strikeout pitchers. "That's some group. They've had great careers. I'm just beginning."

The 26-year-old Deshaies, who finished the evening with 10 strikeouts and a two-hitter, is another in a growing line of Yankee minor leaguers who got away. Last September, after an 8-1 start in Columbus, he was traded, along with another player, to the Astros for Joe Niekro.

After a strong start this season, Deshaies was dropped from the rotation recently in order to give him some rest, a move that could prove even more fruitful if the pitcher can give Lanier a fourth strong starter — along with Mike Scott, Ryan and Bob Knepper — for the Astros' probable playoff series with the Mets. (They sought to clinch the National League West title last night against the San Francisco Giants.)

The victory was Deshaies's first complete game and his first shutout in the major leagues. It also raised his record to 10-5, lowered his e.r.a. to 3.49 and raised his strikeout total to 121, third on a team that boasts Mike Scott and Ryan, who are first and sixth, respectively, in the National League in strikeouts with 285 and 176.

"I was well rested, so I was more worried about my rhythm and my mechanics," he said. "But I knew that in my past history, when I had problems it was at the beginning of the game. So tonight I threw the ball harder early in the game than I have all year."

A Rookie Stops Mets Again

against the Mets in just four days. Marvin Freeman of the Phillies beat the Mets last Sunday. But through it all, even on a day like today, the Mets could draw some positive reinforcement.

Rick Aguilera, who had been a victim of the Mets' most clamorous game of the season, their clinching night last Wednesday, when fans stormed the field, pitched six innings and allowed two runs. He looked strong and said afterward he felt relieved.

Aguilera suffered a bruised left shoulder when a fan trying to leap from the top of the dugout to the field at the end of the game fell on him. He is a right-hander, but the injury caused pain when he threw and he did not take his scheduled turn in the rotation last Sunday. Aguilera will be assigned to a long relief role for postseason play.

"I was really worried," he said. "For the last few days I did absolutely nothing to get ready."

Even on a day like today, the Mets could make history. Carter hit a two-run homer in the eighth, home run No. 139,for the Mets this year, matching the club record, held by of all teams, the 1962 Mets. It was Carter's 22d home run, his first since Sept. 6.

Johnson, aware that the Mets are due to face several left-handers soon, started a lineup including a number of players from his left-handed hitting platoon, even though Hall, the Cubs' pitcher, is a left-hander. With Carter playing right field, Keith Hernandez, the first baseman, was the only Met to take up his usual position from the lineup the Mets customarily send against left-handers.

The Mets had their typically fiery moments, even today. Backman was fined $50 by Umpire Terry Tata when he threw his bat after a called third strike. Hernandez and other Mets who like to stand in the on-deck circle a hitter ahead of their turn were ordered back to the dugout by Tata.

And in the Cubs' five-run seventh, Doug Sisk received a warning from Tata when he hit Rafael Palmeiro with a pitch, proving that even on a dreary day, the Mets can create some fire.

Sid Fernandez, who had been scheduled to pitch Wednesday, but was held back because of a sore left shoulder, threw on the sidelines and reported no discomfort. He will pitch Friday night in Pittsburgh.

Mets to Step Up Security

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif., Sept. 24 (AP) — The Mets plan to step up security to protect Shea Stadium during the National League Championship Series to prevent a recurrence of the damage caused by fans when the team clinched the Eastern Division title, the club's chairman, Nelson Doubleday, said today.

"The last thing you want to do is turn the ball park into an armed camp," said Doubleday, who was attending league meetings here.

"I think what you try to do is do whatever you have to short of that," Doubleday said. "You try to protect the field, the people and the players. We're talking to the New York police department right now about it and get their feelings and go from there."

Rangers Tired of Brawling With Flyers

10 Skirmishes in Last Game

By ROBIN FINN

Because the two teams appear unable to face each other in the exhibition season and concentrate on hockey, the game last night between the Flyers and the Rangers could have had historic significance.

Ranger management, led by Phil Esposito, the general manager, and Ted Sator, the coach, has insisted that there will be no more preseason confrontations between the clubs.

In their first meeting this season, the Flyers defeated the Rangers, 4-1, at the Spectrum last Sunday night, and also claimed victory in the 10 fights that made up the brawl sector of the entertainment. There were 272 penalty minutes assessed, 6 players ejected in as many minutes of play, and no hesitancy on the part of players from either club about being saddled with the league's new two-minute penalty for fight instigators.

The game was only a partial mirror of the preseason altercation between the two clubs last Oct. 1, in which 22 players were sent to the locker room for fighting.

A Flyer Tradition

Clearly, there is a feud between the Flyers and the Rangers that has been fueled by the Rangers' dominance in postseason play in the last few seasons, and unfortunately, the exhibition season has become the perfect vehicle for the flaunting of tempers and bullies. Sator has described this tendency toward pugilism as a Flyer tradition, and, as a former assistant coach for that organization, he undoubtedly knows what facets of the game are important there.

"Aggression is always their game plan, and not just against us," said Tom Laidlaw, a Ranger defenseman. "But after being beaten by us in the playoffs three times in the last five years, they obviously think they have something special to prove every time we play, and the way they want to prove it is by fighting."

According to Laidlaw, the Flyers "set a certain tone" for their games with the Rangers, but he was unwilling to put total blame on the Flyers alone.

"I think they feel they can beat us by beating us up," said Laidlaw, "but maybe we're looking for it from them, too. There's just that chemistry between us, and if I had the choice, I'd say there's no sense playing them in the exhibition season because it just gives them an opportunity to show how tough they are."

Philadelphia, always an aggressive opponent, does seem to concentrate less on that aspect of the game while playing other teams. Against the Islanders on Saturday, for example, there was just one fight, and when the teams played a rematch Tuesday night, there were two. Coincidentally, both games and all fights were won by Philadelphia.

The Flyers, naturally, have denied that they approach their meetings with the Rangers as occasions to exercise vengeance. But Brad Marsh, the veteran defenseman, agreed that the repeated playoff defeats of the Flyers by the Rangers, including the upset last spring, provides an added sense of purpose to their games. "After all, they've knocked us out of the playoffs in seasons where, at least on paper, we were the better team," he said. "But the only way to remedy that is to beat them in the playoffs, not now."

Marsh attributed the turbulence in preseason games to the presence of rookies who are fighting to win jobs. "There are rookies on both sides trying to prove something," he said. "Some of them are goal-scorers, and some are physical players, and they're going to lean toward the fighting side of the game."

Gagne's Career Threatened

Special to The New York Times

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J., Sept. 24 — An inexplicable back injury is threatening to end Paul Gagne's career at the age of 24. The Devils' left wing has had an history of injuries, but this time, it appears more serious than before. He missed 17 of the last 24 games last season with a herniated disk. In his six years in the National Hockey League, Gagne has been sidelined with a knee injury, a broken cheekbone, a separated shoulder and a torn groin muscle. He has often played in pain.

This time, Gagne said, the pain was intolerable. He spent three days in traction last week, but there was no improvement.

"I'm really scared," he said here tonight before the exhibition game against the Capitals. "There are just a lot of questions right now. They think it's related to a nerve." After team doctors could not detect the problem, Gagne was examined thoroughly Tuesday by Dr. Scott Eisenberg, a back specialist. The Devils said this evening they would not have any announcement on Gagne's condition for at least another day or two.

Collins May Replace Injured Patterson

By FRANK LITSKY

Special to The New York Times

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J., Sept. 24 — Elvis Patterson, the Giants' starting left cornerback, likes to say he always gives 110 percent effort. But his strained left groin muscle has left him at less than 110 or even 100 percent, and Mark Collins, a rookie, may replace him in Sunday's game here against the New Orleans Saints.

In last Sunday's 14-9 victory over the Los Angeles Raiders, Patterson left the game in the third quarter after pushing Marcus Allen of the Raiders out of bounds. Collins played the rest of the game.

After Patterson's departure, the Giants did not use their nickel defense. In the nickel, which employs five defensive backs, Collins normally enters the game and replaces Patterson on the left corner. Patterson becomes the nickel back, covering a third wide receiver.

The nickel defense is used to avoid giving up long yardage on passes, though it has not always worked out that way for the Giants. In the closing minutes against the Raiders, without the nickel, their regular defense shut down Jim Plunkett's passes and preserved the victory.

Patterson Questionable

Coach Bill Parcells has listed Patterson as questionable for Sunday, which meant he gave him a 50-50 chance to play. Patterson did not take part in practice today. Instead, wearing shorts and no pads, he watched from the left sideline and offered Collins advice and encouragement.

Patterson said he had few answers about his injury.

"I don't even know when I got it," he said. "I guess it was sometime last year. I feel pain every day, every time I go on the field, in my groin, in my toe, in my legs. Everything takes its toll. Anything I do, my body starts aching.

"Good players have to play through it. I'm trying to. I did last year. I blocked it out mentally. I forgot about my bumps and bruises, I started to make plays and I made more plays."

Now, he cannot make those plays. But Collins can, as he demonstrated in the last quarter against the Raiders.

On second down and 15 yards to go from the Giants' 16-yard line, Plunkett threw for Dokie Williams in the end zone. Collins was covering Williams, in front of him and almost leaning on him. As the ball arrived, Collins leaped, leaned over Williams, and batted it away.

No Interference

It was the kind of a play that often results in pass interference, and such a penalty then would have given the Raiders the ball on the 1-yard line. But there was no interference, and instead of a touchdown and a 14-13 deficit, the Raiders settled for a field goal have a natural ability to stay with his man step-for-step.

"I've never been uncomfortable playing corner," said Collins. "Early in training camp, I wasn't sure what I was doing, if I was playing my man too close or too far away. But I studied my playbook, sometimes more than I practiced, and I learned. I can still get more comfortable with the system. I've got a long way to go, maybe another year."

Hill May Not Play

The Giants' only major injury, in addition to Patterson's groin muscle, is Kenny Hill's sprained left ankle. Hill sat out Wednesday's practice and was listed as questionable for Sunday. ... Frank Wattelet, the Saints' free safety, has a strained stomach muscle, but is listed as probable. That means he has a 75 percent chance to play. ... Dave Wilson will start at quarterback for the Saints because Bobby Hebert broke his right foot in Sunday's 26-14 loss to the San Francisco 49ers. Babe Laufenberg is the only backup. Wilson will be lost for four to six weeks. ... With 280 yards rushing in three games this season, Joe Morris has moved to ninth place

Now on Tour: Eastern League

It's a national sport of China and not totally unknown in the United States, so there's not much surprise that a group of young Chinese athletes would be invited to this country for a series of games against American youngsters. For the first game, in New York today, the home team may be at something of a disadvantage. The New York players, a five-borough team of 11- and 12-year-olds assembled by the Police Athletic League, have had only one practice together, while the visitors have been hard at it for the last two months.

The American athletes do have a certain tradition on their side, though. The sport is baseball, and anyone who finds it odd that the American national pastime is a national game on the Chinese mainland hasn't been keeping up, according to Bowie Kuhn, the former commissioner, who persuaded A.T.&T. to sponsor the tour and is serving as its traveling spokesman.

"China is very much a part of the international baseball movement," Kuhn said, noting that the sport, which was introduced to China by American missionaries in the 19th century and later denounced by the Communist Government as a symbol of Western decadence, had been on the upsurge since it received official sanction in 1976. Kuhn even predicts that the Chinese will soon rival, if not surpass, the Japanese as Asia's leading exponents of the game. "They have the size," he said, "and there are more than a billion of them."

For the current 12-day tour, which includes games against Little Leaguers in Washington, in Honolulu and at Dodger Stadium in Los Angeles, Chinese athletic authorities have sent only a dozen young players for what is described as a "learning experience." Yesterday it included a cram course in American-style sports promotion as the 12 Chinese youngsters, wearing bright blue warmup suits, found themselves surrounded by swarms of dignitaries and public relations people at the tour's opening ceremonies at A.T.&T.'s midtown headquarters.

The players proved quick learners. Speaking through interpreters, they said they were impressed with New York, were looking forward to the series of games and were expecting to win today's 2:30 P.M. opener at the Murry Bergtraum High School field (near Chinatown, appropriately enough).

For all the attention being paid to the Chinese, Vonthello Lewis, a diminutive center fielder for the New York squad, and by his own account a "very good" hitter, was not daunted. "I think we can pull this one off," he said.

From the Sideline

Dissatisfied with the new "Monday Night Football" duo of Al Michaels and Frank Gifford? So was a guy who dropped by the Jets' camp yesterday. He said he found the broadcasts lacking in analysis.

"It's boring," said the critic. "They don't explain why things are done. I do like Frank personally, but they miss a lot."

The speaker? Joe Namath, booted from the booth by ABC after his rookie season as analyst and color man last year.

The First Lady

Buddy Ryan, the coach with a propensity for identifying his players by number instead of name, responding to a Veterans Stadium banner that asked whether he treated his wife the same way: "Sure I do. She's a 10."

Sweet Thoughts

When Coach Dan Henning of the Falcons got to his office Tuesday morning, magnificent visions of Atlanta's come-from-behind 37-35 victory over Dallas still quite fresh, he found a 10-pound box of candy and a bouquet of flowers.

From whom?

The Washington Redskins, that's whom.

"I think they're just happy for us," says Henning, a former Redskin assistant, adding with a smile: "And maybe happy for themselves."

Washington and Dallas have together accounted for five straight titles in the National Conference East, and 11 of the last 14, in the process developing perhaps the fiercest rivalry in pro football. But the Redskins' coach, Joe Gibbs, pleads innocence.

"I sent the candy and flowers," he says, "because everybody is 3-0. I am, my son J. D.'s high school team is, Dan is, and so is Dan's son Danny," the quarterback for the Maryland Terps. Yep, that's everybody, except for the Cowboys.

Hey, Yogi!

Manager George Bamberger of the Brewers, on Boston's drive to clinch the division title: "I hope they don't win it in Milwaukee. That means we lost."

Bamberger again, feigning outrage over reports that if he should retire, Jim Frey would be interested in his job: "The body ain't even warm yet."

needed a touchdown, not another field goal, to win. They never got it.

Collins, from Fullerton (Calif.) State, was the first of the Giants' four second-round draft choices this year. In man-to-man coverage, he seems to yards. This year, he has passed Bill Paschal (2,057 yards), Tucker Frederickson (2,209) and Mel Triplett (2,289), and he is bearing down on Rob Carpenter (2,371) and Joe Morrison (2,474). The career leader is Alex Webster (4,638).

Gastineau Is Unhappy

really stemmed from the defensive backs, who were either injured or unfamiliar with their positions.

"We had pretty good pressure," said Carson, talking of Dan Marino's performance last Sunday, when he threw for six touchdowns. "The problem was the coverage."

Against the Colts, Gastineau will be chasing a rookie quarterback from Illinois named Jack Trudeau, who will be playing because Gary Hogeboom has a separated shoulder. The Colts' quarterbacks have been sacked 20 times in three games — a rate that will produce more than 100 over the season.

However, at this point opposing teams have devised ways to keep Gastineau off the quarterback just long enough. In Trudeau, though, he is against an inexperienced player, one hardly ready to be compared with the Jets' three previous quarterback opponents — Jim Kelly of the Bills, Tony Eason of the Patriots, or Marino.

Gastineau denied that the divorce proceedings he is going through have affected his performance.

"It's those little itty-bitty things I haven't been able to concentrate on because of the groin injury," he said. "Getting off at the snap. That's where a good player gets great."

He sounded as if he expected to do the "little itty-bitty" things again, perhaps as early as Sunday.

Troubled Running Game

The Jets' running game is still troubled with problems. Rocky Klever, the all-purpose backup, and Michael Harper, a wide receiver, worked at halfback Wednesday. With Freeman McNeil still out, his backup, Johnny Hector, and Hector's backup, Dennis Bligen, were unable to practice. Both are listed as questionable, or 50-50. Hector has a sprained foot while Bligen is suffering from a turf-toe, or a stubbed toe, a common injury on artificial turf. . . . Harry Hamilton was able to engage in light practice for the first time. He suffered the serious hairline cut against New England that required 27 stitches.

Knicks' Eyes on Mullin

salary cap purposes, has set the figure at $450,000. Thus, since Walker will earn $300,000 this season and if the trade involves him, Mullin would have to renegotiate his contract so that it would show a $150,000 pay cut for this season.

"The salary cap is a problem," said a Knick source, but he added "there may be ways to solve it."

Bill Pollak, Mullin's agent, would not commit himself on whether Mullin would be willing to renegotiate his contract.

"The two teams will have to agree on the terms of a trade," he said, "before the salary cap even becomes an issue."

Although Mullin officially refuses to express his feelings about the trade talk, before he was drafted by the Warriors he hoped the Knicks would find a way for him to play at Madison Square Garden.

Mullin, the last of the first-round choices to sign, missed the first six games last season. He finally ended his holdout on Nov. 6, several hours before the Warrior game against the Seattle SuperSonics. Rushed into action, he scored 24 points in his N.B.A. debut. An outstanding passer and outside shooter, he ended last season on the injured list after averaging 14 points for the 55 games he played in.

Kenny Walker Talks Held

Stirling and Larry Fleisher, the agent for Kenny Walker, the Knicks' top draft choice, met for several hours Monday afternoon in an effort to reach an agreement that will have the 6-8 forward in the fold by Oct. 3, the first day of training camp.

"We've talked a couple of times, so I guess that's progress," said Fleisher, who recently criticized Stirling for failing to meet with him. "We've started what somebody might call negotiations, but we sure aren't there yet."

Although neither side would reveal figures, the signings of other top choices, would indicate that Walker would command abaout $600,000 a year. That, too, would present the Knicks with salary cap problems.

Boxing Notebook

Duarte in the First Round of Comeback

By PHIL BERGER

In the midst of a thriving pro career, Frankie Duarte, a ranked bantamweight from West Los Angeles, became an alcoholic.

In 1979, Duarte, who had a 32-4 record at the time, disappeared from the fight game and began a drinking binge that lasted until 1984.

Duarte, who as a child would lift large pieces of furniture to get attention — "I wasn't really any good at many other things," he said — found boxing an even better way to gain notice.

"I was 19 years old and I was getting the attention I wanted," Duarte said. "People would tell me, 'What a great fighter. What a great guy.' I thought it was going to last forever.

"As I became a contender, I began partying. The partying got better. The boxing got worse."

After he lost a decision to Rolando Navarrete in June 1979, Duarte stopped boxing and became a full-time drinker.

In his five years of alcoholic excess, Duarte fought just once, and then only because he was flat broke from his dissolute life. "I wanted a few bucks," he said. "A guy made me an offer: $2,000. I trained three weeks."

In that fight, a February 1981 bout in Honolulu, Duarte lost a 10-round decision to Neptali Alamag. After the match, he returned to the streets. Eventually, though, depression set in. "The people who use to pat me on the back now teased me," he said. " 'You got so loaded you fell on your face.' And I'd say, 'I remember when you thought I was the greatest guy in the world. Now you don't want me to be with you.' "

The embarrassment at how low he had fallen "really hurt," enough for the fighter to change his ways.

Duarte is 32 now. In July, he won the North American Boxing Federation bantamweight championship with a ninth-round knockout over Jesus Salud, a victory worth $50,000. The triumph highlighted a 10-bout comeback (eight victories, a draw and a split-decision loss to Richie Sandoval, who was then World Boxing Council bantamweight champion) that began in May 1984.

Under the brothers, Dan and Joe Goosen, who respectively manage and train him, Duarte has moved back into the rankings: the W.B.C. has him 12th in its current ratings. And there is even talk now of Duarte's being offered a title match against Bernardo Pinango, the W.B.A. bantamweight champion, in 1987.

J. L. Ivey, a junior lightweight from the Kronk stable in Detroit, may have achieved a dubious first in boxing.

Ivey, who has a 17-5 record, reacted badly to a split-decision loss to José Vidal Concepción at the Pontiac Silverdome in July, and took an open-hand swing at one of the two judges who scored against him.

"I deeply regret and apologize for what I did," said the 22-year old Ivey, who maintained that he did not hit the judge, Sue Denton of Dearborn Height, Mich., a seven-year veteran of professional fight judging.

However, Dr. Stuart Kirschenbaum, the chairman of the Michigan Athletic Board of Control, who was at ringside for the fight, saw it differently. "Ivey leaned through the top ring ropes and yelled several obscenities at Denton," Kirschenbaum said. "He proceeded to swing his right hand and hit her on top of the forehead. She was knocked backward and one of my commission members caught her as she was falling backward off her stool."

Mrs. Denton, at 4 feet 11 inches and 112 pounds, was so angered she tried to climb into the ring to get back at the fighter. She had to be restrained by Kirschenbaum's commissioners. "If I'da gotten into the ring," Mrs. Denton said, "I'da slapped him back."

The Michigan Athletic Board of Control gave Ivey an indefinite suspension, which is still in effect. Mrs. Denton, whose husband, Gene, and son Tom run an amateur boxing club in Dearborn Heights, has filed assault and battery charges against Ivey.

Bob Arum, the promoter, has been conspicuously absent from negotiations for the prospective Marvelous Marvin Hagler-Sugar Ray Leonard fight.

Although Arum is expected to be the promoter of the bout, the enmity between Mike Trainer, Leonard's attorney, and Arum was regarded as a serious obstacle to getting the deal made. So Arum stayed away while Trainer conferred instead with Pat and Goody Petronelli, Hagler's co-managers, as well as with Morris Goldings, the champion's attorney, and Peter Mareb, his accountant.

"Negotiations without personalities entering into it," Arum called the proccess.

The promoter said, however, that he had remained in "telephonic communication" with the Petronellis on the evolving particulars of the deal.

According to Arum, recent reports that real progress has been made toward an agreement between the Hagler and Leonard camps are accurate. "We are very very close," he said.

Marvin Kohn, a deputy commissioner with the New York State Athletic Commission, begins his 36th year this month with that organization.

Reese Leads by 4 In Met Tournament

By JOHN RADOSTA

Special to The New York Times

OLD WESTBURY, L.I., Sept. 24 — Don Reese, one of the host pros, shot a five-under-par 67 today to take a four-stroke lead after the second round of the 60th Metropolitan Professional Golfers' Association championship.

Reese, assistant professional at the Glen Oaks Club, was at 138, six under par for 36 holes.

Jim Albus of Piping Rock scored his second successive 71 for 142.

Reese's boss, Tom Joyce, was in a five-way tie for third place at 145. The others were David Gosiewski, head pro at Noyac Golf and Country Club; Rick Vershure of Woodmere; Darrell Kestner, a former tour player now teaching at Winged Foot, and Mike San Filippo of Ridgeway.

The three-day championship tournament, sponsored by Izod, is being rotated on the Red, White and Blue Nines of the Glen Oaks Club, one of Long Island's most difficult courses. The 60 low scorers in the field of 160 qualified for the final round Thursday.

Reese, who is 32 years old, played on the PGA Tour in 1981-82 with limited success. He made the cut in only 7 of 29 tournaments, and he lost his playing card for inadequate performance. He plans to enter the Tour's qualifying tournament in November to earn another card.

Reese, nicknamed Pee Wee, said yesterday that his "local knowledge" was a big advantage in competing at Glen Oaks, particularly on these fast, undulating greens.

In this morning's round he carded six birdies against only one bogey, that the result of a three-putt green.

San Filippo was among the leaders through the 16th hole but he bogeyed the 17th and triple-bogeyed the 18th, where he dunked his drive into a water hazard.

Gosiewsi, who qualified as an alternate in the United States Open last June, scored an eagle 3 on the 530-yard first hole of the White Nine. He got home in two with a 3-wood and then sank what he called a "radar putt" of 80 feet.

N.C.A.A. Will Start Postseason Testing

fect, but Byers asserted, "Len Bias's unfortunate death focused attention."

"College campuses' liberal attitudes toward drugs is a major factor," Byers said at a news conference here.

Asked afterward to expound on that, Byers said that he was referring to a noblesse oblige attitude toward students. "The general college attitude of alma mater is gone," he said, "and the student is given greater freedom."

He said that suppliers of drugs were taking advantage of that permissive attitude and that most of the sellers came from off-campus and found it easy to deal in the college atmosphere.

Curbing Drug Use Is Aim

Drug abuse cannot be stopped by attacking poppy fields abroad or sealing borders or having the President and his wife address the nation on television, Byers said, but rather by reducing consumption.

"This program is a major factor in curbing the use of drugs," he said.

Similar mandatory drug-testing programs have been contested. The union representing players in the National Football League, for example, has forced the league to postpone, pending arbitration, such a plan on the grounds that it represents a substantial change in the collective-bargaining agreement and cannot be introduced unilaterally.

In addition, when the Federal Government and some private companies have tried to institute them, they have been resisted by employees, unions and civil liberties groups.

When Byers was asked about possible violations of constitutional rights of privacy, he answered that there did not appear to be a constitutional right to participate in intercollegiate sports and that, therefore, the N.C.A.A. could require a person to consent to drug testing as a condition to participate.

Question of Individual Privacy

Alan Adler, legislative counsel of the American Civil Liberties Union, took another view.

He said that the sports association had assumed so many governmental roles that it had come under the same Fourth Amendment constraints against government in assuring individual privacy.

"Just as government cannot condition a government job on a surrender of constitutional rights, the N.C.A.A. cannot require a person to surrender rights of privacy in order to participate in sports," Adler said.

"The other interesting question is this: Is this a national criterion? Are we going to test people who score a lot of points, who play a lot of minutes? Are we going to assume that these people use drugs?"

New Trophy Set For No. 1 Team

United Press International and the American Football Coaches Association, who have been collaborating since 1950 on weekly rankings of the nation's top-20 college teams, will join with the family of the late Edward J. Gerrits, a Florida construction company executive, to award an annual trophy to U.P.I.'s national championship team.

They will also establish an annual four-year scholarship for a non-athlete from that college.

The U.P.I. Coaches Trophy, made of Waterford crystal and ebony for the Gerrits family by Tiffany, will be awarded to the team voted No. 1 by the coaches after the New Year's Day bowl games. The presentation will be at the annual coaches association convention.

The $32,000 scholarship, funded by the Gerrits Foundation, will be granted annually to an entering freshman who demonstrates strong academic potential and financial need, but who is not an athlete.

Soviet Advances In Title Volleyball

PARIS, Sept. 24 (UPI) — The Soviet Union, winner of six of the last 10 world championships, defeated Taiwan today in straight sets to open the 11th men's world volleyball championships.

The Soviet team, seeking a third consecutive world championship, overwhelmed the Taiwanese by 15-2, 15-4, 15-6 in their first Group B match at Tourcoing in northern France.

France scored an easy 15-2, 15-4, 15-3 victory over Venezuela in Group A at Montpellier, Brazil, defeated Egypt, 15-6, 15-8, 15-3, in Group C at Clermont Ferrand and Argentina routed Greece, 15-6, 15-3, 15-6, in Group D at Orleans.

The United States, the favorite to win the 16-team tournament, was to meet Japan in Group D later today.

The top three teams from each group advance to the semifinals Monday in Nantes and Toulouse. The final round is Oct. 5-6 in Paris.

STRATTON
INCREDIBLE VIEWS...

But within a few miles of Stratton Ski Area, this recently renovated 3 bedroom brick home sits high on the side of a hill with a full length concrete deck supported by steel beams hanging over the edge!

Originally built by a contractor, this home must be seen to be truly appreciated! At the price of $395,000 this home is priced below those in the surrounding area, but the owner says to sell. Immediate occupancy would allow use by foliage season.

Also for sale, by the same owner, is a 1 acre +-building lot for $41,500 with owner financing and located in the same area of Four Seasons recreational activities. For an appointment call John Goulin, Property Manager at (802)257-7076(D) or (802)254-5822 (E).

BUSINESS Digest

The Economy

The Fed chairman said the dollar has fallen enough against other major currencies. Paul A. Volcker told a House subcommittee that policy makers should rely on other tools to redress imbalances in the world economy. The remarks seemed to put him at odds with the Reagan Administration. Just last week, Treasury Secretary Baker all but threatened to drive the dollar still lower if the nation's trading partners did not move more aggressively to spur their economies. [Page D1.] The dollar eased slightly on Mr. Volcker's remarks. Gold was unchanged at $431 an ounce in New York. [D20.]

A measure to reduce the 1987 budget deficit by $15.1 billion was overwhelmingly approved by the House. The package includes the sale of Federal assets and bookkeeping maneuvers. [A1.]

Some Republicans tried in vain to block the tax revision bill, which comes up for a final vote and expected passage in the House today. [D2.] Efforts to revise New York State's tax code to conform with proposed Federal tax changes have run into problems. [A1.]

Companies

Honeywell is retreating from the computer business, a concession that it cannot compete with I.B.M. The company said it is holding talks about selling a large stake in its languishing computer business to NEC of Japan and Bull of France. The Honeywell move accelerates the most intense consolidation trend the computer industry has seen since the late 1960's. [D1.]

A clothing trade group warns that U.S. textile and garment companies must act more as middlemen between overseas producers and domestic retailers, rather than as manufacturers. [D1.]

Allied Stores rejected Campeau's tender offer of $58 a share for up to 30 million of its common shares. Allied said it would consider a restructuring or the sale of all or part of the company. [D1.]

CBS representatives met with regulators, reportedly assuring them that a management shakeup did not constitute a transfer of the company's ownership. [D5.]

Sales of American-made automobiles rose 1.7 percent in the Sept. 11-20 period over the corresponding 1985 period. [D5.]

Grand Met is in talks to sell the Liggett Group, the ailing tobacco concern, but it declined to name the prospective buyer. [D2.]

Asher Edelman offered to buy Lucky Stores for $35 a share, or about $1.7 billion in cash. [D5.]

T.W.A. will post a $70 million third-quarter profit and substantial fourth-quarter earnings, its chairman, Carl C. Icahn, said. [D5.]

BankAmerica ended a deal to buy the Oregon Bank for $57 million, citing "higher priority demands on its resources." [D5.]

Adm. Bobby R. Inman will head a new Texas concern that plans to acquire military electronics companies. [D2.]

International

The Soviet Union announced ambitious trade measures to cut through the red tape that offered little incentive to Soviet concerns to buy or sell abroad. Almost 100 ministries and enterprises will be allowed to make deals directly with foreign partners. [D1.]

New aid for Mexico has emerged as one of the principal issues

2d Offer Rejected By Allied

Campeau Bid $58 a Share

By ISADORE BARMASH

The directors of the Allied Stores Corporation yesterday rejected a tender offer of $58 a share from the Campeau Corporation, a Canadian real estate developer, and said they would consider a possible restructuring and the sale of all or parts of the company. Some analysts said they thought that Allied would buy back stock.

Allied said its board had determined that this second Campeau offer — the first was for a direct merger at the same price — was not in the best interests of shareholders and recommended that they not tender their shares. Campeau began its offer to buy up to 30 million of Allied's 47.2 million outstanding shares on Sept. 12.

An Allied spokesman said that the company and its investment adviser, Goldman, Sachs & Company, would make a decision on its future course by Oct. 9, which is the expiration date of the hostile Campeau offer.

Allied said in a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission that it might change its capital structure, acquire its shares or sell all or parts of the company to another company or individual.

Dollar Low Enough for Volcker

Position Seems At Odds With Administration

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24 — Paul A. Volcker, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, said today that the dollar had probably dropped enough in relation to the currencies of other industrial countries and that policy makers should rely on other tools to redress imbalances in the world economy.

"In contrast to the situation 18 months ago, and assuming growing markets are open to us, my sense is that we are for now reasonably close to an appropriate adjustment" in foreign-exchange rates, Mr. Volcker said in a statement to a House Ways and Means subcommittee. Later, in response to a question about the dollar, he said, "I'm not sure a further adjustment is necessary."

In today's currency trading, the dollar eased after Mr. Volcker's remarks became known. [Page D20.]

An Appearance of Discord

His comments, perhaps the most specific the Fed chief has made on the subject in recent years, appeared to put him at odds with the Reagan Administration as the world's finance ministers and bankers gathered here for various crucial meetings, including the annual convention of the International Monetary Fund and World Bank.

Treasury Secretary James A. Baker 3d all but threatened last week to drive the dollar still lower if United States trade partners did not move more aggressively to spur their economies and thereby raise demand both for their own goods and for American exports.

"Unless there are additional measures to promote higher growth abroad, there will need to be further who at 67 years of age "will not want to work for anyone else." He added, "So it's likely that in looking for a white knight as one of their options, Allied will be seeking a non-retailing partner who will leave Allied functioning as an entity under Macioce."

Others Studying Company

Another analyst, who asked not to be identified, said that a number of possible acquirers had been studying the company but none had made a firm offer.

Allied, one of the largest retail chains in the country, operates such department stores as Jordan Marsh in Boston and Miami and such specialty store chains as Bonwit Teller, Ann Taylor, the Plymouth Shops and Garfinckel's.

Among those analysts who believe that Allied will attempt to buy its own shares, Stuart Robbins of Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette said, "Buying back shares enhances return on equity." But he added that stockholders would also benefit from sale of some of the company's weaker divisions.

was negotiating with the NEC Corporation of Japan and Groupe Bull S.A., France's state-owned computer maker, to take a large stake in Honeywell's languishing computer operations.

NEC and Bull have close technological ties to the Minneapolis-based Honeywell, whose other operations include making military equipment and control devices for homes and commercial buildings.

The announcement appears to mark Honeywell's virtual withdrawal from the computer business following years of watching its share of the mainframe market shrink and seeing its efforts to enter the office automation business go awry.

While Honeywell released no details of what changes are in store, they seemed certain to include surrendering control of the Information Systems division, which accounted for nearly a third of the company's $6.6 billion in revenues last year.

Honeywell's top executives, who have been unavailable for comment since rumors about the company began circulating two weeks ago, did sold its mainframe computer technology to Honeywell in 1970. •

In May, the Burroughs Corporation acquired the Sperry Corporation, a combination that created the world's second-largest computer company, surpassed only by the International Business Machines Corporation. Many experts speculate that the Control Data Corporation, a Honeywell rival in Minneapolis, may be the next computer maker forced out of the mainstream of the business.

Analysts doubted that Honeywell would receive more than a token payment for the stake in its computer division, whose chief attractions are its marketing and service operations. But they said the match seemed appropriate, noting that the companies have long exchanged technology.

"The common ingredient here is that the computer architectures are very close," said Thomas J. Crotty, president of Gartner Securities, part of the Gartner Group in Stamford, Conn., which follows the industry. "Integrating these computer lines is

New Record Is Building Up

The United States trade deficit — the amount by which imports exceed exports — is likely to approach $200 billion this year, far beyond the record of $148 billion set in 1985.

American industry and agriculture have suffered severely from the loss of foreign markets and from import competition. The corresponding buildup of monetary surpluses abroad — to a large extent reinvested in this country through the purchase of Treasury securities — has made the United States dangerously reliant on continued flows of foreign capital.

Mr. Volcker warned today that Americans have "been living in kind of a false paradise" by consuming more than they earn, borrowing the difference.

The extent of any disagreement between the Administration and Mr. Volcker remains unclear. Both have repeatedly pressed other countries, West Germany and Japan in particular, to take expansionary steps, and both acknowledge that the West German economy, at least, has shown recent signs of faster growth.

An Administration official, in fact,

Trade Rights Expanded For Soviet Enterprises

By SERGE SCHMEMANN

Special to The New York Times

MOSCOW, Sept. 24 — The Soviet Union has announced ambitious measures to decentralize and enhance its foreign trade, giving almost 100 ministries and enterprises the right to make deals directly with foreign partners.

Until now, trade has been conducted largely through the Ministry of Foreign Trade and affiliated foreign organizations rather than with manufacturers or end users. That unwieldy process consumed considerable time and offered little incentive for Soviet enterprises to sell or buy abroad.

Under the new measures, outlined in Tuesday's issue of the newspaper Sotsialisticheskaya Industriya, or Socialist Industry, more than 20 ministries and 70 major enterprises will have the right to operate directly with Western and developing countries and to maintain their own accounts in convertible currencies. The change takes effect Jan. 1.

"The U.S.S.R.'s share in world trade does not correspond to the level and demands of the economic development of the country," it said. "The export potential of manufacturing industries, above all mechanical engineering, is not being used satisfactorily." The new measures, the paper said, were intended to encourage enterprises to produce export-quality goods and to use imports more effectively.

The report did not name the ministries or enterprises that would be allowed direct international links. But James H. Giffen, an American banker and president of the U.S.-U.S.S.R. Trade and Economic Council, who visited Moscow last week, said the organizations included certain automobile and truck factories, petrochemical plants and at least one refrigerator factory.

"They have decided on the reorganization of their foreign economic system," Mr. Giffen said. "They are going to change the method of doing business. They want to be part of the international trading economy. If all this comes about, this would have a tremendous impact on the political relationship."

At the top, a new state commission for foreign economic links, headed by a deputy premier, will be formed to coordinate and encourage trade and technology exchanges, the paper said. The Foreign Trade Ministry will continue handling trade for enterprises

The New York Times/Sept. 25, 1986

Special to The New York Times

ATLANTA, Sept. 24 — The annual gathering of the garment and textile industry, called the Bobbin Show, brought nearly 30,000 delegates to Atlanta this week, hoping dearly for the success of American-made apparel.

But on Thursday, the American Apparel Manufacturers Association, one of several industry trade groups, will throw some cold water on that by raising a warning that the industry cannot reverse the import trend and must change its emphasis to rely more on service than manufacturing.

Rather than wail against imports, it says, American manufacturers should view themselves as middlemen between overseas producers and domestic retailers. This view has been acted on privately by segments of the industry for months now, but this is the first time it has been raised quite so publicly and officially.

"The rest of the world is going to continue to make garments whether we like it or not," said Bruce E. Moore, vice president of manufacturing for the Arrow Corporation, and chairman of the committee that will issue the report.

"Manufacturers have to say to retailers, 'Maybe we don't make what you need, but we know where you can best get it; let us get it for you,' " he said.

Mr. Moore is one of the manufacturers at the convention, which brought together mills and a few retailers.

Clothing imports have more than doubled since 1980, and for years the talk has been of finding ways to reverse that trend.

But for the first time, the association is warning that familiar suggestions — import quotas, faster delivery of garments, development of labor-saving machinery and more funds for public relations campaigns such as "Made in the U.S.A." — may not be enough.

Such an approach recognizes that import quotas are an unlikely prospect, said Ron Segal, chairman of Bobbin International, which is sponsoring this week's gathering. This is the first major meeting of the industry since Congress refused to override President Reagan's veto of such quotas.

It also recognizes that "machines cannot work miracles," Mr. Segal said, noting that "even God can't make a piece of equipment to compete with 38-cents-an-hour wages in Sri Lanka versus $6.50 here."

Similarly, he said, public relations campaigns, while increasing consumer awareness, will have little effect on sales. "The bottom line is consumers don't give a fig about labels," he said. "They look at price, they look at quality, they look at style."

But the companies are doing what they can. One of the week's buzz words, for example, is "quick response," or getting goods to the retailer faster than overseas competi-

Anderson Battle May Be Over

By PETER H. FRANK

Special to The New York Times

DALLAS, Sept. 24 — The battle for Anderson, Clayton & Company apparently ended today as a hostile bidding team called off its $697 million offer.

Bear, Stearns & Company and Gruss & Company, the New York investment firms that first offered to buy the company in late May, said all tendered shares would be returned to shareholders.

Today's announcement came six days after the Ralson Purina Company and Anderson, Clayton disclosed that discussions were being held for Ralston to pay $755 million, or $62 a share, in cash for the Houston company. The Bear, Stearns group was offering $56 a share.

Analysts saw Ralston as a friendly suitor. Ralston's board is scheduled to vote on the proposal Friday.

A spokesman for Bear, Stearns would not comment on whether today's move signaled a defeat for the investment group, or whether other countermoves were still possible. Analysts had suggested that an antitrust lawsuit might be filed if the Ralston-Anderson, Clayton deal was begun, in an attempt to thwart the transaction. Ralston, with a 27 percent share of the pet food market, would control 34 percent if the acquisition was completed.

Long-Distance Phone Access

ALLEN J. PORTNOY picked up the phone Tuesday in Huntsville, Ala., and dialed Ross Spicer, an executive vice president for Southwestern Bell, at the telephone company's headquarters in St. Louis. Nothing too special about that. People have been making telephone calls ever since Alexander Graham Bell spoke to Thomas A. Watson on March 10, 1876. But Tuesday's call nevertheless prompted one Southwestern Bell spokesman, Timothy E. Clark, to say: "It was a Watson-Bell type thing."

What was remarkable about the call was that it had been routed over MCI lines at a switching office in Little Rock, Ark., using equipment that most engineers thought was incapable of routing long-distance calls to any lines but those of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company.

The call demonstrated a new way that the nation's seven regional Bell operating companies could offer equal access to long-distance carriers by modifying outdated switching equipment instead of ripping it out and replacing it. Mr. Portnoy's company, Digitech, developed the equipment, and Southwestern Bell has ordered it.

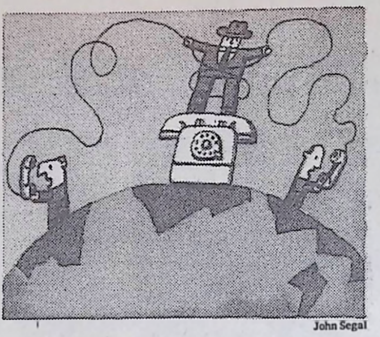
As part of the breakup of A.T.&T., the Bell operating companies were required to offer all customers equal access to the long-distance carriers that requested it by Sept. 1, 1986. When that deadline passed, however, about one-third of the nation's telephone lines were still without equal access. The Bell operating companies blamed outdated switching stations such as the one in Little Rock for the missed deadline. To replace the equipment would have been too costly and would require more time than they had, they said.



John Segal

The telephone companies say it costs about $3.5 million and takes two to three years to replace an average-size switching office — about 10,000 telephone lines. Mr. Portnoy says Digitech's equipment, known as EAS 20/20, could modify the existing equipment in those offices for $250,000 in just a few months. The Bell companies say other companies besides Digitech are developing similar modification equipment, but none have announced it.

What a switching office does is switch a call from a local telephone line, which physically connects the telephone in someone's home or office with the switching office, to a long-distance trunk line that will carry it to the switching office nearest its destination. That distant switching office then switches the call back onto a local line directly connected to the phone number the caller dialed.

To provide equal access, a switching office needs to be able to switch a call to more than one long-distance trunk. And it needs to be able to check which long-distance carrier has been designated by a customer to get long-distance calls. Finally, it must be able to keep track of the length of the call and calculate the amount that should be billed.

The old switches were all electromechanical switches. They have moving parts that are triggered by electrical impulses to switch calls from local lines to long-distance trunk lines. The switches were unable to switch a call to more than one long-distance line and, because they had no computer memory, were unable to remember if one line was supposed to be switched to a different long-distance trunk than another.

The new switches, which telephone companies have been installing for several years, are computerized and have no moving parts. They also have memory, so that any time a caller lifts a telephone off the hook and dials 1, the switching office is able to check which long-distance carrier the caller has chosen and therefore which outgoing long-distance trunk line the call should be routed to.

"What we've done is add computer memory to what was a dumb switch," Mr. Portnoy said, describing his switching system. The Digitech system adds three pieces of equipment to the electromechanical switch: a register translator, a protcol converter and an administrative billing computer.

The register translator registers the call coming in and, with its built-in computer ability, checks its memory to determine which long-distance carrier the caller chose.

The protocol converter translates the incoming information into a digital language, called MF, that the long-distance carrier uses and sends that information — essentially the telephone call — onto the proper long-distance carrier's trunk line.

The administrative billing computer keeps track of the call, the time spent on the line and the charges incurred.

Southwestern Bell, which ordered the Digitech system, is waiting for other companies to develop competitive systems, Mr. Clark said. Other Bell operating companies are considering the Digitech system. But some, such as Bell Atlantic, have questioned whether it would be wiser to replace outdated equipment rather than modify it. Some services that are profitable for telephone companies, including call forwarding and call waiting, still require modern digital switching equipment.

A G.O.P. Effort to Block Tax Bill Is Frustrated

By DAVID E. ROSENBAUM

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24 — A last-ditch effort by a band of Republicans to block the tax revision bill when it comes up for a final vote in the House of Representatives on Thursday was apparently blunted today by the House Republican leader, Robert H. Michel.

Mr. Michel's pre-emptive action, which was supported by the White House, removed one of the last obstacles to enactment of the sweeping legislation, according to senior members of both parties.

Representative Robert T. Matsui of California, one of a team of Democrats assigned to round up and count

But Mr. Michel rose and said he would pre-empt the Archer move by offering his own recommittal motion with no instructions to the conferees.

Lawmakers from both parties agreed that the Archer motion, calling for restoration of deductions for such items as Individual Retirement Accounts, stood a chance of passage. They also agreed that the Michel motion would almost certainly fail.

The Archer motion "has a lot of flourishes in it" that would make it "very palatable" to many representatives, said the Speaker of the House, Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., a strong supporter of the tax legislation. If it passed, the Archer motion would "destroy" the bill, said Mr. O'Neill, a Massachusetts Democrat.

Representative Philip M. Crane of Mr. Archer, said the Archer motion would be "a real threat to passage of the bill" but the Michel motion had no possibility of being approved.

Mr. Crane, who called the tax bill "fundamentally flawed," said at first that he would try to call another Republican meeting on Thursday to challenge Mr. Michel, but he gave up the idea after Mr. Archer refused to sanction it. "There's no challenge to his leadership," Mr. Archer said of Mr. Michel. "If he wants to offer the motion, more power to him."

Asked to explain the Michel move, Representative Willis D. Gradison of Ohio, a Republican who backs the tax bill, said, "It would be very embarrassing at the least for this No. 1 domestic priority of the President's to be rejected by House Republicans."

took his stand to guarantee that the House would take a straight up or down vote on the tax bill. The Reagan Administration's strategy has been to force lawmakers to do that. The staff member said, however, that Mr. Michel was acting on his own and not at the request of the President.

The most senior Republican member of the committee involved who is opposed to the legislation under consideration normally has the right to offer the recommittal motion. In this case, that would have been Mr. Archer, the second-ranking Republican on the Ways and Means panel. The ranking Republican, John J. Duncan of Tennessee, supports the tax bill.

However, only one recommittal motion is permitted. And Mr. Michel, as the Republican leader, will always be recognized first by the Speaker of

Inman Will Head Electronics Venture

Adm. Bobby R. Inman said yesterday that he would become chairman of a new holding company that would acquire military electronics companies and develop "leading-edge technology."

Admiral Inman said he would begin the day-to-day operations of the start-up company as chief executive officer on Jan. 1 when he leaves the Microelectronics and Computer Technology Corporation in Austin, Tex., a consortium of military businesses devoted to doing battle with Japan's electronics giants.

The new privately held company will be called Westmark Systems Inc. and will be owned by a private merchant banking firm in Texas, the Mason Best Company. Mason Best, founded in 1984 by Elvis L. Mason, the former chairman and chief executive of the Interfirst Corporation in Dallas, and Randy Best, a Houston businessman, has formed similar holding companies involved in acquiring concerns in jewelry retailing, broadcasting, publishing and specialty foods.

"Of all the options that have come up," Admiral Inman said, "this is the closest one that would let me get at what I've been talking about."

"We're going to set out to buy a number of companies," said Admiral Inman, a former deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency and director of the National Security Agency. "We'll be up in business and talking by early spring." Admiral Inman said that the company was only interested in friendly acquisitions where top management would be asked to remain.

"There are a number of companies," Mr. Mason said, "that if they were commonly joined in a holding company would be supportive of each other, and could share each other's technology, support systems, marketing and management."

No financial information was released, either for Westmark or Mason Best, but the capital raised for Westmark was called "substantial" by Mr. Mason.

"The problem is going to be not raising money, but cutting it off and spending it wisely," said a board member, Robert S. Strauss, a partner at Akin, Gump, Strauss, Hauer & Feld and former chairman of the Democratic National Committee. "This is extremely well financed."

The company, which has looked at more than 100 possible acquisition candidates, Mr. Mason said, is now seriously considering between two and five. He said the planning for the holding company began more than a year ago and that Admiral Inman was contacted over the summer.

Admiral Inman, who is 55 years old, brought together 12 of the largest United States electronics and military contractors four years ago in a cooperative effort to compete with Japanese research in electronics and computer technology. He announced on Sept. 4 that he would not renew his contract as head of the consortium.

Other board members for Westmark include Donald Rumsfeld, a private businessman and former Secretary of Defense; Drew Lewis, chairman and chief executive of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and former Secretary of Transportation; David T. Kearns, chairman and chief executive of the Xerox Corporation, and Clifford J. Grum, president and chief executive of Temple-Inland Inc.

Chief Faces New Era At First Pennsylvania

George A. Butler has been with the First Pennsylvania Bank through thick and thin. The thick came in the days of heady expansion in the early 1970's, as First Pennsylvania moved from a commercial bank doing business locally in Philadelphia to become the 20th-largest commercial bank in the nation. The thin came after the expansion unwound in the late 1970's and the bank survived its mistakes with a $1.5 billion Federal bailout.

Now the bank, as announced on Tuesday, plans to be acquired by Maployees would keep their jobs. "It's the kind of transaction in which everybody is a winner," he said.

Mr. Butler, 58, majored in accounting at the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School. But he decided against accounting and joined First Pennsylvania's management training program. "My mother used to tell the story that when I was 5 years old I said I wanted to be a bank president," he said. "I must admit I don't remember that."

First Pennsylvania got in trouble in the late 1970's with a string of bad

160 to 165 of the 253 Democrats in the House would vote for the bill. A staff member who has been working with the Reagan Administration and Republican legislative leaders predicted that a majority of the 180 Republicans would also vote for the bill. With two vacant seats in the House, 217 votes will be needed for passage.

"I think we should win this by 30 to 50 votes," said Representative Dan Rostenkowski, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

At a meeting of House Republicans to discuss the bill this morning, a senior member of the Ways and Means Committee, Bill Archer of Texas, announced that he planned to offer a motion on the floor Thursday to send the bill back to conference with the Senate with specific instructions to restore some of the popular deductions that were abolished or restricted by the conferees last month. Approval of such motions to recommit, which precede final votes, nearly always kills the legislation involved.

Grand Met in Talks to Sell Liggett

By RICHARD W. STEVENSON

Grand Metropolitan P.L.C. said yesterday that it was negotiating to sell the Liggett Group Inc., the ailing United States tobacco concern that markets the L&M, Lark and Eve brands and is a major seller of generic cigarettes.

Grand Met, the London-based conglomerate, did not name the prospective purchaser. There were rumors the RJR Nabisco Inc.'s R. J. Reynolds unit might be interested, but analysts said it was more likely that a foreign company would be the buyer. A Reynolds spokesman declined to comment.

Grand Met said it was confirming the negotiations in response to widespread stock market rumors. The company said the negotiations were likely to go on for several weeks.

Grand Met has been trying to find a buyer for Liggett for more than two years. An agreement in 1984 to sell the operation for $325 million to a group including management collapsed as profits fell. A Liggett spokesman, Carol Jova, said the current negotiations did not involve a sale to a management group.

Liggett, based in Durham, N.C., is the smallest of the six major tobacco companies, holding about a 3.9 percent share of the $34 billion domestic market. Its branded products have wilted over the last few decades under the marketing onslaught of such larger rivals as Reynolds and Philip Morris. But it enjoyed several years of strong growth recently when sales of low-priced generic cigarettes, a segment in which it was the largest player, grew sharply.

The larger companies, however, have moved into the low-priced category with discount brands, and new competitors have put additional pricing pressure on Liggett's generic products. Liggett's operating profit last year tumbled to $6.4 million, down 90 percent from $66.7 million in 1984.

"Liggett's position in the U.S. isn't worth a plug nickel," said David Goldman, an analyst at L.F. Rothschild, Unterberg, Towbin.

Grand Met has been eager to get out of the cigarette business almost since it got into it through its acquisition of Liggett's tobacco, liquor and consumer-products businesses in 1980.

Cigarette sales have been slowly declining as a result of increasing health consciousness, and tobacco companies have been concerned about being held liable in a number of court suits for illnesses, injuries and deaths related to smoking. So far, they have prevailed in those suits, but many others remain to be tried.

Last year Grand Met sold the Pinkerton Tobacco Company, which makes smokeless and pipe tobacco, to Svenska Tobaks A.B. for $137.8 million. In this country Grand Met still owns a variety of companies, including Alpo Petfoods, Pearle Health Services, an eyeglass retailer, and two large soft drink bottlers.

who is chairman and chief executive of the First Pennsylvania Corporation, the bank's holding company, said yesterday that First Pennsylvania bank had worked its way through its difficulties, even though today it is about half the size that it was in its heyday and is primarily a regional operation. With $5.65 billion in assets, First Pennsylvania is the third-largest bank in Philadelphia.

"It seemed to me they could help us recapitalize our organization," he said of Marine Midland. "They are much larger and have much more in the way of resources."

Mr. Butler said that Marine Midland's philosophy was to operate its subsidiaries autonomously. And he said that had also been the philosophy of the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, which owns 51 percent of Marine Midland.

Mr. Butler said that the First Pennsylvania name would be retained, that he would continue to be chairman and chief executive and that em-term bonds proved a disaster. John R. Bunting, chief executive, resigned in 1979 and Mr. Butler took over.

The next year the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and a group of 25 banks put together the rescue package.

"We paid everything back in three and a half years," Mr. Butler said. "It was the only bailout the F.D.I.C. has done that's been successful. Nobody lost a cent in the deal. They got their principal back with a market rate of interest and made a profit on warrants."

Mr. Butler said that for recreation he golfs and spends time with his family, including four grandchildren. "Some people have told me that I am low key and laid back," he said. "But some of my associates have also discovered that I can be impatient and very demanding."

Pillsbury Profit Shows 8% Gain

MINNEAPOLIS, Sept. 24 (AP) — The Pillsbury Company said earnings rose 8 percent in its fiscal first quarter, ended Aug. 31. Pillsbury, a packaged-food producer that also owns the Burger King and Godfather's Pizza restaurant chains, said it earned $47.9 million, or $1.10 a share, up from $44.2 million, or $1.01 a share, a year before. Revenues in the latest quarter rose 9 percent, to $1.38 billion, from $1.26 billion.

John M. Stafford, chairman, president and chief executive, said in a statement that the strength in the foods group "more than offset a small earnings decline in restaurants and a higher tax rate."

Operating earnings rose 52 percent for the foods operation but fell 5 percent for Pillsbury's restaurants.

The paper described the measures as part of the "profound reconstruction of the economic mechanism" ordered by the Communist Party Congress last February, which stressed that decision making and initiative be shifted to industrial managers and away from the central bureaucracy.

The newspaper said that the existing foreign-trade mechanism was "in contradiction" with the goals of "intensifying" the economy, modernizing plants and accelerating scientific-technological progress, goals that have been central in the ambitious economic planning of Mikhail S. Gorbachev since he came to power in March 1985.

Sotsialisticheskaya Industriya also reported that the development of "new forms of economic cooperation with capitalist countries" was envisioned, including joint ventures and cooperation in research and production. Until now, the Soviet Union has resisted joint ventures with the West.

Mr. Giffen, who is also managing partner of the Mercator Corporation, a New York merchant bank, said that the Russians had shown particular interest in food processing, agricultural business, energy, chemical, petrochemical, consumer goods and services, transportation and industrial modernization. He added that negotiations have begun in the last few weeks with 30 to 40 American companies.

Mr. Giffen quoted Vladislav L. Malkevich, first deputy minister of foreign trade, as telling him that the dealings of organizations permitted to trade directly with foreign companies would be based on "economic self-sufficiency, hard-currency self-sufficiency and self-financing."

A related move is the Soviet effort to join the 92-nation General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, although the Reagan Administration, fearing that Moscow would disrupt and politicize the organization, has opposed its membership. A Soviet application to attend GATT meetings in Punta del Este, Uruguay, this month as observers was rejected.

We just passed the $1,000,000,000,000 milestone. That's over a trillion dollars. A new record for the total value of shares-traded-in-one-year on the New York Stock Exchange. And we did it in nine months. We think that's something to cheer about.

No single equities market has even come close to this record. And even if all the major markets in the world—including NASDAQ—were combined, they still wouldn't top this performance.

The rapid processing of share volume in a trillion-dollar world requires the most advanced market technology ever assembled. We currently have the capability to handle 300-million-share days and 500-million-share-day models are under development.

Achieving these levels of performance would be impossible without the commitment of our members, member firms and our more than 1,500 listed companies.

The teamwork provided by this combination of people and technology enables us to serve an immense worldwide audience. And to offer the depth, liquidity and visibility that capital formation thrives upon.

So while we pause today for a little cheerleading, tomorrow, it's back to work on the second trillion.

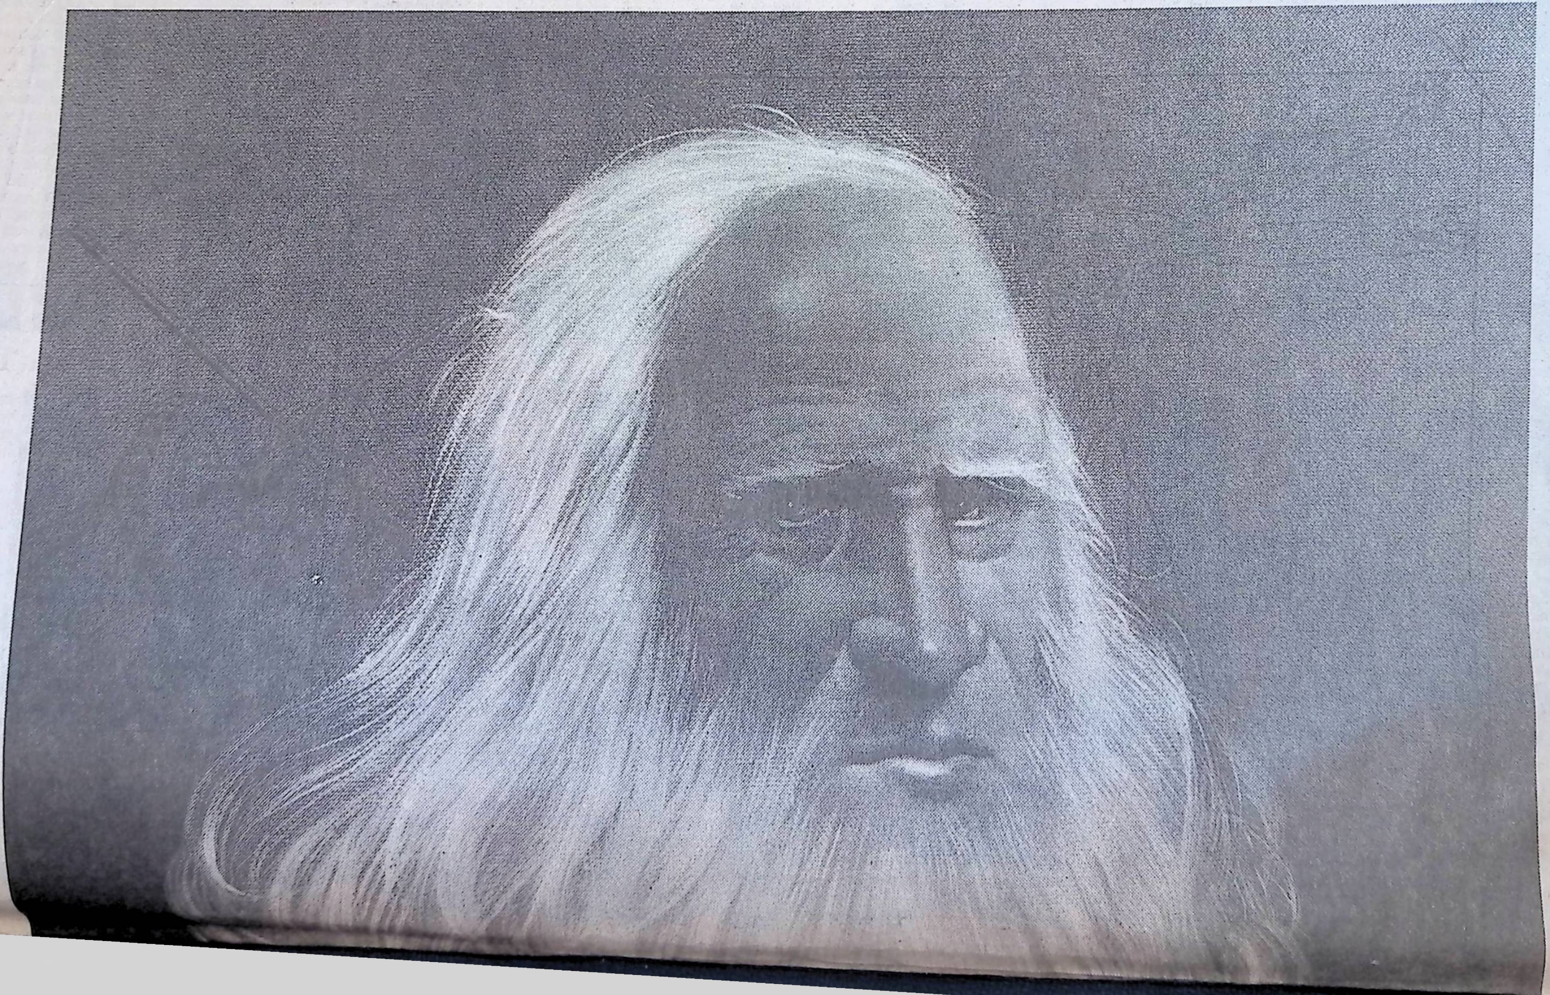
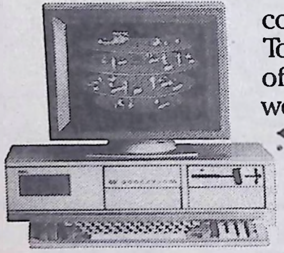
"The lines do not stand alone, they should join in a glorious unity."



Leonardo da Vinci

The NEC Perspective: da Vinci described it 430 years ago.

The unity of the lines in Leonardo da Vinci's drawings captures the heart of C&C, the NEC perspective that points the way to the integration of computers and communications.

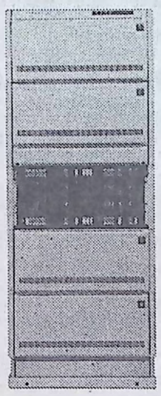


To unify the modern office, you need both, working together.

That's one reason why our remarkable NEAX 2400 Information Management System is more than a powerful digital Private Branch Exchange. It works to unite your office equipment into a total integrated system. Its voice, text, image and data capabilities allow you to build a system to your design.

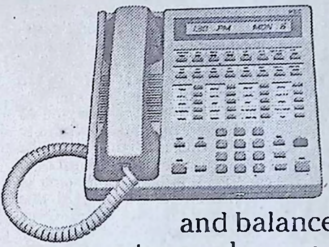
Voice and data capabilities are further enhanced when you connect the NEAX 2400 to D-term digital telephones and the new APC IV computer. A perfect blend of compatibility and power, the APC IV runs all the most popular software.

NEC BIT Series fax terminals, cellular mobile telephones and teleconference systems can also be easily integrated with NEAX 2400… in networks with fiber optic, microwave or satellite transmission links.



Every NEC product is a strong individual performer. Combined, they're even better. They interface smoothly with other suppliers' equipment, so it's easy to form the exact system you need.

As da Vinci said, "The lines do not stand alone." And neither do our products.



NEC offers leadership on every level: from super computers to global communications networks.

No other supplier matches our broad and balanced knowledge in computers and communications.

10-Day Auto Sales Rise 1.7%

Gains Linked To Incentives

Special to The New York Times

DETROIT, Sept. 24 — Sales of new American-made automobiles rose 1.7 percent in mid-September from record levels last year, the nation's major manufacturers reported here today. Aggressive consumer incentive programs, in the form of below-market-rate financing, propelled the sales this year and in 1985.

Deliveries of 294,636 new cars, or 32,737 daily, topped last year's record sales of 289,582, or 32,176 daily. There were nine selling days in the Sept. 11-20 period both this year and last. The seasonally adjusted annual selling rate for cars was 11.5 million units, up from 11 million a year ago but down from the frantic 18.5 million pace set early this month after the incentive programs were announced.

Good And Bad News

Light-truck sales of 137,320 jumped 44.2 percent from the corresponding period a year ago, bringing total sales of light vehicles, including cars and light trucks, to 431,956, up 12.2 percent.

Jack V. Kirnan, an auto analyst with Kidder, Peabody & Company, said there was good news and bad news in today's report.

"Clearly the programs have been very successful in paring down inventories," he said, referring to the programs that offer 2.9 percent and lower annual financing rates.

Mr. Kirnan added that domestic manufacturers were likely to experience resistance in the marketplace over the higher prices on 1987 models. "I think the payback effect from this round of programs is going to be substantially stronger than from other programs because of the lower rates on '86 models and higher prices on the '87's," he said.

And in Texas today, Lee A. Iacocca, chairman of the Chrysler Motors Corporation, said there could be widespread incentives again by the first of the year. "I expect the showrooms won't have one person in them on Oct. 11," when all of the campaigns will have expired, he said.

Cut-rate financing on 1986 model cars will squeeze the General Motors Corporation's third-quarter earnings and steal some sales from the fourth quarter, but should not mean a fourth-quarter sales slump, according to Roger B. Smith, the company's chairman said.

"We definitely have borrowed sales from the fourth quarter, but that doesn't mean a slump," Mr. Smith said Tuesday. "I think we'll still have a good quarter."

G.M. Sales Up Slightly

G.M. reported today that its car sales in the mid-September period were about even with last year, up only two-tenths of 1 percent. The company delivered 157,534 new cars and 58,749 light trucks, a 38.6 percent jump from the period a year ago. G.M.'s share of the domestic market declined, however, to 53.4 percent, from 63 percent early this month.

The Ford Motor Company said its car sales of 77,224 sagged 7.5 percent from very strong sales last year. Light-truck sales, however, soared 72.7 percent, to 51,901. Ford has been very successful this year in promoting its light trucks.

Chrysler reported the most improvement in car sales among the Big Three with deliveries of 47,666, up 29.3 percent. Its sales of domestically produced light trucks rose 10.5 percent, to 15,778.

A.M.C. Off 28.8 Percent

An estimate of sales by the American Motors Corporation, which is offering short-term car loans with zero-rate financing, fell 28.8 percent from last year, to 2,580. Jeep sales almost doubled in the period, however, with estimated deliveries of 7,300, up 92.1 percent.

Volkswagen of America Inc. reported sales of 2,087 new cars, down 18.7 percent, while the American Honda Motor Company said its car sales of 5,550 were 60 percent ahead of the 1985 period.

The Nissan Motor Corporation, which recently resumed building cars at its plant in Smyrna, Tenn., said it sold 1,995 autos, down 16.1 percent from the 1985 period. Domestically produced truck sales by Nissan were also down, by 23.7 percent, to 3,592.

Low-Car-Rate Extension Seen

Special to The New York Times

IRVING, Tex., Sept. 24 — Sweeping sales incentives on automobiles will continue as long as the General Motors Corporation produces more cars than it can sell without the incentives, Lee A. Iacocca, chairman of the Chrysler Corporation, said today.

Mr. Iacocca termed the current round of incentives, which includes interest rates as low as 2.4 percent, "nuts."

"If G.M. had cut its production schedules we would be O.K.," Mr. Iacocca said. G.M. officials have defended their actions, saying they were necessary to prepare for the introduction of new models.

Nevertheless, Mr. Iacocca said domestic competitors would be forced to match any future G.M. incentives to hold on to their market share, even though he acknowledged the current round of incentives was costing Chrysler $800 to $1,000 a car in lost profits.

Mr. Iacocca also said Chrysler was exploring more extensive manufacturing cooperation with the ailing American Motors Corporation. Chrysler expects to announce later this week a final agreement to manufacture its rear-wheel-drive cars in A.M.C.'s underused assembly plant in Kenosha, Wis.

BankAmerica Ends Oregon Bank Deal

By ANDREW POLLACK

Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 24 — The BankAmerica Corporation said today that it had ended its agreement to buy the Oregon Bank, Oregon's third largest, for $57 million.

BankAmerica said it had "higher priority demands on its resources at the present time." The nation's second-largest banking company, reeling from a $640 million loss in the second quarter, has been trying to sell off assets to raise capital.

BankAmerica also had been experiencing pressure from the Orbanco Financial Services Corporation, owner of the Oregon Bank, to complete the acquisition.

The ending of the agreement is another setback for BankAmerica, though analysts said it would hurt the bank's pride more than its operations, since the acquisition was such a small one.

When the agreement was announced in April 1985, BankAmerica called it a strategic move in its efforts to serve the entire West Coast. The move would have filled the geographic gap between the Bank of America's operations in California and the Washington operations of the Seafirst Corporation, which BankAmerica bought in 1983.

Analysts and banking industry sources said it was likely that the Federal Reserve Board, which had to approve the acquisition, had qualms about letting the troubled BankAmerica expand, especially by buying another troubled bank.

"Most people have felt the probability of this going through has been rather low since the second-quarter loss," said Donald Crowley, analyst with Keefe, Bruyette & Woods. In 1985, the Comptroller of the Currency rejected BankAmerica's application to establish limited service banks outside California.

A BankAmerica spokesman said, however, that opposition from the Fed was not the reason for canceling the Orbanco agreement. He did say that the Fed had asked BankAmerica for more information about the proposed acquisition. A spokesman for the Fed said it does not comment on such matters.

Orbanco has announced its intentions to liquidate and has already sold off its other major unit, the Northwest Acceptance Corporation, a commercial finance company.

"This is an amicable parting with BankAmerica," Francis J. O'Connor, Orbanco's president and chief executive, said in a statement. "We still in-

Reliance Is Said To Cut Offering

Reliance Group Holdings Inc., the holding company headed by Saul P. Steinberg, has for the second time reduced the price and number of shares in its initial public offering, Wall Street sources said yesterday. The price of each Reliance share has dropped to $10, from $12 and $13, according to the underwriters of the offering — Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., the First Boston Corporation, and Shearson Lehman Brothers.

The number of shares to be offered has been reduced to 15 million, from 20 million. A spokesman for Reliance said the reductions were the result of a change in market value. Reliance originally planned to offer 24.3 million shares at $16 to $19 a share. When the market value of the shares dropped to between $12 and $13, Mr. Steinberg withdrew 4.3 million of his shares from the offering. Reliance is a holding company with insurance and diversified investment operations.

Tenneco to Buy Steiger Tractor

FARGO, N.D., Sept. 24 (AP) — Steiger Tractor Inc., a farm equipment maker that has been operating under bankruptcy-law protection since June, said that Tenneco Inc. had agreed to buy the company in a deal worth $75 million. Tenneco also owns the J. I. Case Company, which makes agricultural and construction equipment. Tenneco said it plans to consolidate Steiger's operations with J. I.-Case.

Tenneco offered $3.50 for each of Steiger's 4.4 million shares of outstanding stock, which comes to about $15.4 million, Irvin E. Aal, Steiger's president and chief executive, said. The Houston-based company will also assume Steiger's estimated $55 million debt and pay about $5 million in other fees, bringing the total package to about $75 million, Timothy Lundberg, Steiger's vice president for finance, said.

CBS and F.C.C. Meet on Change of Control Issue

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24 — Representatives of CBS Inc. met today with officials of the Federal Communications Commission and a key member of Congress who have raised questions about whether the recent management shake-up at CBS constituted a transfer of control of ownership of the company.

In separate meetings they assured the regulators and the lawmaker that the changes did not violate F.C.C. rules that require Government approval for a change in control, sources familiar with the meetings said.

Four representatives of the company met with Mark S. Fowler, chairman of the F.C.C., and at least three other commission members, as well as with Representative Timothy E. Wirth, Democrat of Colorado, and Group. It included Newton Minow, a Chicago attorney who is a director of CBS and a former F.C.C. chairman; Robert McConnell, vice president of Washington affairs for CBS, and Richard Wiley, a former chairman of the F.C.C. and an outside counsel to the company.

Mr. Wirth and several other groups have made separate requests of the F.C.C. in the last week to investigate whether control of CBS had changed when Laurence A. Tisch, chairman of the Loews Corporation, teamed with William S. Paley, the founder and former chairman of CBS, to force the resignation of Thomas H. Wyman, the chairman and chief executive of the communications giant.

Mr. Paley, owner of 8 percent of CBS's stock, became acting chairman. Mr. Tisch, whose Loews Corporation has acquired just under 25 percent of CBS's stock over the last year, was named acting chief executive.

"The essential point they made was company responded to a request made Sept. 17 of Mr. Jankowski, the F.C.C. official said. That request asks the company to answer allegations that Mr. Tisch and Mr. Paley's actions constituted a change in control of the company, he said.

Inquiry Begun

Separately, Mr. Fowler said in a letter sent today to Mr. Wirth that "an inquiry" of the changes at CBS had been initiated. That was a reference to the agency's Sept. 17 letter to Mr. Jankowski.

Mr. Fowler said the commission "would rely on the totality of the facts available to it at the time," adding that "statements from a licensee provide a useful, but certainly not exclusive, source of information and evidence."

A transfer of control of a widely held company can occur even if less than 51 percent of its stock is involved.

facto control over the company without commission approval.

The problem facing the commission in studying the Tisch case and numerous others in recent years is the absence of a statutory definition of control in the Communications Act of 1934. In judging whether control has shifted, the commission must rely on case and administrative law.

Sanctions Mentioned

Addressing the issue in his letter to Mr. Wirth, Mr. Fowler said the agency had a variety of "sanctions" it could take in the event it found CBS had violated regulations regarding transfer of control.

Among those listed in the letter, released by Mr. Wirth's office, were revocation or denial of license renewal of stations owned by CBS, an order that stock in a licensee be sold, fines or admonitions.

Mr. Tisch's company was the subject of a similar inquiry by the F.C.C.

Lucky Gets Offer From Edelman

By JOHN CRUDELE

Asher B. Edelman, the New York investor, offered yesterday to acquire Lucky Stores Inc., a California-based retail and specialty chain, for about $1.79 billion, the company said.

The $35-a-share cash offer was made in a letter that was sent late yesterday to Lucky Stores' president, John M. Lillie. The tone of Mr. Edelman's letter was friendly, no threats were made and the extent of his holdings of Lucky Stores stock was not disclosed.

Mr. Edelman's offer did not represent a substantial premium for Lucky Stores' stock. In trading yesterday, its shares rose $1, to $34.25, on the New York Stock Exchange.

Offer Not a Surprise

There has been speculation on Wall Street for several weeks that Mr. Edelman, who recently fought unsuccessfully to gain control of the Fruehauf Corporation, was accumulating stock in Lucky Stores. Sources said that he currently owns less than 5 percent of the 51 million shares that Lucky Stores has outstanding.

Mr. Edelman's offer was not unexpected. For the last few days there had been rumors that he was lining up financing for the offer and had been interviewing investment bankers for the deal.

Lucky Stores, based in Dublin, Calif., operates food and specialty stores as well as its Gemco one-stop shopping outlets. Its operations are mainly in California, but some are scattered around the Middle West and throughout Florida. In all, Lucky had some 1,400 stores at the end of last year.

After the close of stock trading yesterday, Lucky Stores confirmed that it had received the offer, which it said was subject to financing. It said that its board of directors would discuss the proposal at a previously scheduled meeting next Thursday.

Sale of Gemco May Be Considered

Even before yesterday Lucky was believed to be preparing for a takeover offer. There was speculation on Wall Street last week that Lucky Stores had hired Goldman, Sachs & Company, its regular investor banker, to study responses to a takeover move. Analysts believe one option would be to sell Gemco, a state-of-the-art chain of stores that sell everything from home and auto products to food.

At the end of 1985, Lucky Stores reported, it had 80 Gemco stores in addition to 444 food centers, 138 supermarkets, 376 automotive stores, 320 fabric centers and 107 general merchandise stores. In 1985 Lucky Stores earned $86.5 million on sales of $9.4 billion.

The food stores use the name Lucky, Eagle, Food Basket and Kash N'Karry; the specialty stores, Kragen and Checker, and the fabric stores, Hancock, Minnesota Fabrics and Fabrics Warehouse.

Pacific Stereo Deal Collapses

Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 24 — The Pacific Stereo Corporation, once the world's largest retailer of brand-name stereo equipment, said today that plans for the company's reorganization by the U.S. Electronic Group had fallen through. As a result, Pacific said liquidation of remaining furniture, fixtures and leases would begin around Oct. 1.

Pacific, based in Emeryville, Calif., said U.S. Electronic, of Aurora, Colo., withdrew its plan to reopen Pacific's California and Washington stores because of "apparent difficulties in obtaining needed financing." The Colorado company had said it would operate 40 to 50 Pacific stores, closing the rest of the 64-store chain.

Pacific filed for Chapter 11 protection from its creditors in May, reporting that it owed $36.8 million and had assets of just $21.6 million. According to Paul Buxbaum, executive vice president of Buxbaum, Ginsberg & Associates, the consulting firm in charge of the liquidation, Pacific's leases, furniture, fixtures and equipment are valued at several million dollars.

U.S.-Japan Air Talks

TOKYO, Sept. 24 (AP) — Japanese and American negotiators began talks today to revise a 34-year-old civil air transport agreement, an American Embassy official said.

Icahn Forecasts Profit For T.W.A. in 3d Period

By AGIS SALPUKAS

Carl C. Icahn, the chairman of Trans World Airlines, said yesterday that the airline would have a profit of about $70 million in the third quarter and that it would have a substantial profit in the fourth quarter.

Mr. Icahn also spoke of the need for further consolidation in the airline industry and said that T.W.A. was considering joining in the trend and linking up with another airline or company outside the airline industry.

However, Mark A. Buckstein, senior vice president of external affairs and general counsel at T.W.A., said that the airline was not currently talking with another company about joining forces.

Shift in Flights

Mr. Icahn, making his projections to a group of analysts, said that T.W.A. had only had one profitable fourth-quarter in its history, in 1966. He largely attributed the good results to the substantial cuts in costs and redeployment of the carrier's fleet when European travel dropped severely because of terrorist attacks. T.W.A. made large shifts of its planes to domestic and Caribbean markets and cut back service to its European markets in the spring and summer.

Julius Maldutis, an airline analyst for Salomon Brothers, which was host at a dinner meeting at the Water Club last night, said that the results were one of the most remarkable turnarounds for the airline industry.

T.W.A. had a loss of $193.1 million in 1985 and a $264.2 million loss in the first half of this year. Last year it had a $19.3 million loss in the third quarter and a $123.4 million loss in the fourth quarter.

Domestic Division

Particularly significant, Mr. Maldutis said, was that Mr. Icahn noted that about half of the operating profits in July and August were from T.W.A.'s domestic division. Mr. Maldutis said that the last time the airline had a profit for the year in its domestic division was in 1972.

Mr. Maldutis said that Mr. Icahn had told the group that T.W.A. had cut its expenses by about $400 million a year.

Andrew Kim, an airline analyst for F. Eberstadt & Company, said that while T.W.A.'s results were good they were in line with broad industry trends. He said that most other major carriers expected good results for the third and fourth quarters because traffic has gone up substantially.

Mr. Kim said that domestic traffic increased by 17 percent in August.

"T.W.A. is an example of what is happening in the rest of the industry," he said.

Chemical Raises Stake in Horizon

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24 — The Chemical New York Corporation has raised its stake in the Horizon Bancorp to 24.99 percent, or 2.42 million shares, from 17 percent. In a Securities and Exchange Commission filing, Chemical said it had received warrants to buy the additional shares after Horizon shareholders approved the merger between the two banks on Sept. 11.

Chemical plans to acquire Horizon, of Morristown, N.J., when the interstate merger becomes legal under New York and New Jersey banking laws. Chemical estimated that all of the necessary regulatory approvals would be granted by 1988. Between Aug. 21 and Sept. 17, Chemical also bought 151,500 Horizon common shares on the open market for prices ranging between $54 and $55.50.

Buyout at Carrols

SYRACUSE, Sept. 24 (Reuters) — The Carrols Corporation said it had agreed to be acquired by a company formed by the president of Carrols, David J. Connor, and other senior managers, along with Morgan Ventures III, whose principals are Alan Vituli and Peter Weidhorn. The acquiring company will pay $11.25 a share in cash, or a total of about $88 million, Carrols said. Carrols has about 7.8 million common shares outstanding. Carrols said. Carrols owns restaurant franchises and candy stores. Its stock closed at $10.75 today, up 37.5 cents a share, in New York Stock Exchange trading.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 24 — Faced with lower-than-expected sales to major customers, Convergent Technologies expects to report a loss for the third quarter, ending Sept. 30, the company said. The increase in the number of new customers has not kept up with declining sales to the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, Convergent's biggest customer, leaving the company with declining revenues. Convergent is based in San Jose, Calif.

Speaking before analysts here, Paul C. Ely, Convergent's president and chief executive, said the third quarter "was turning out differently than we expected as recently as six weeks ago." Mr. Ely declined to project the size of the loss expected or whether Convergent would be profitable in the fourth quarter.

May to Sell Horne

The May Department Stores Company said that it had agreed to put the Joseph Horne department stores in Pennsylvania and Ohio up for sale in a settlement it reached to dismiss pending legislation against it by the City of Pittsburgh. May is in the process of merging with the Associated Dry Goods Corporation, parent of Joseph Horne. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania had sought to enjoin the merger on antitrust grounds since May operates the Kaufmann stores and Associated the Horne stores in Pittsburgh. Analysts said that the 13 Horne stores had sales last year of about $200 million.

Carbide Payment

The Union Carbide Corporation said holders of special distribution rights would receive a second payment of $3.22 for each right on Oct. 14. The distribution, which is in line with what industry analysts projected, would be made to holders of the special rights as of Oct. 6. The payment follows the disbursement of $30 a right made to holders on July 30. The two distributions represent the difference between the sale proceeds of Carbide's consumer products divisions and the book value of those units, a total of about $1.1 billion.

Fleet Financial

PROVIDENCE, R.I., Sept. 24 (AP) — The Fleet Financial Group, already among the top five mortgage agencies in the nation, reached agreement to buy the Security Pacific Mortgage Corporation, based in Denver. J. Terrence Murray, Fleet's chairman and president, said the purchase would increase the Providence bank's mortgage servicing portfolio by $2.5 billion, to $17 billion, making Fleet the nation's third-largest mortgage banking company.

Spotlight on Loans for Mexico

World Bank, I.M.F. Gather

By PETER T. KILBORN

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24 — New loans for Mexico have developed as one of the principal issues facing the conferences among world finance ministers that begin here Thursday, participating officials said.

New aspects of how the biggest industrial countries might coordinate their economies, another central issue here, were also disclosed by the officials, who spoke today and earlier this week on the ground that their comments not be attributed.

American officials and officials of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank suggested that a stalemate over a $12 billion aid package for Mexico might finally be broken. The officials said the Mexican debt issue, which has cast some gloom over planning for the meetings here, could well be resolved.

Mexico, the I.M.F., the World Bank and the leading industrial nations settled on the 18-month loan agreement in July. But talks with private banks, which would provide half the money by the I.M.F.'s deadline of Sept. 29, have been stymied over Mexican appeals for special interest-rate concessions from the banks and the counry's reluctance to give up something lse in return. After a hiatus, those alks have resumed in New York.

"A big issue here will be Mexico nd whether the banks come through y the deadline," said an I.M.F. official. "It will color the whole proceedings," he said, because an agreement would then improve the lending environment for new loans to other applicants, such as the Philippines and Nigeria. "There's a good chance they may get it done."

An agreement would be a political coup for Treasury Secretary James A. Baker 3d, for whom it would represent the most complete application of his plan to expand such lending in return for the borrowing countries' adoption of more growth-oriented economic policies.

In briefings and interviews, American officials distinguished between the efforts of the leading industrial countries, known as the Group of Seven, to set up a process for coordinating their economic policies and the more immediate conflict dividing the United States against Japan and West Germany over interest rates and the dollar.

The ground for the meetings here was laid at the Tokyo economic summit conference last May. At that time the seven nations — the United States, Japan, West Germany, France, Britain, Canada and Italy — agreed to work out a way to coordinate their domestic economic policies to assure that all the countries could move the world economy toward steady growth and low inflation.

The foundation of policy coordination, the countries agreed in Tokyo, should be the principal indicators that countries use to assess their economies, such as budget deficits, inflation and interest rates, growth, unemployment, money-supply growth and their current-account balances — their trade balances plus their transactions in services and finance. The I.M.F. was instructed then to work out the differences in these statistics so they could be used to obtain a reliable picture of the countries' performance.

This work has been completed, American and I.M.F. officials said. But in Tokyo Mr. Baker and some of the other officials also wanted to devise a means to put the indicators to work in managing their economies. This required picking one or possibly two indicators that reflect economic relationshiops among nations and that the seven countries would use to align their economies.

Officials here indicated that one obvious instrument — foreign-exchange rates — has been rejected. But they said that another — current-account balances as a percentage of each country's gross national product — might be used.

"That's a possible approach," a senior Administration official said in an interview. "It would not be inconsistent with that exercise."

In using the instrument, the United States, whose current account last year was about 3 percent of its gross national product, might agree to try to push it down to 2 percent by a year later, while Japan, which had a current-account surplus of about 3 percent, might agree to reduce the surplus by a similar amount.

But whether the seven countries here will agree to such a process is an open question, officials said. "If we can agree on concerted remedial action to be taken by some countries, fine," the same official said. "If we can't, fine."

The whole matter has been obscured by the Administration's concern over the growth of the American trade deficit, the rise of Japan's and West Germany's trade surpluses and those countries' concern over the huge American budget deficits, which they blame for the trade imbalances.

Mr. Baker says the American trade deficit, by encouraging protectionist moves in Congress, has provoked his appeals to West Germany and Japan to speed up their economies. Their doing so, he maintains, would lead to more imports of American goods and reduce the trade deficit.

"I'd like us to preserve the world's free trading system, which is very much at risk," Mr. Baker said in an interview, "and we're not going to be able to do that if we can't resist the strong protectionist sentiment in this country. I'd like to see the other countries join us in that effort."

Interest-rate cuts, in the Administration's view, would provide a demonstration of policy coordination. But Administration officials made it clear today that they want the rate reductions, or similar actions to speed up the German and Japanese economies, even if little progress is made in setting up a continuing process to coordinate policies.

I.M.F. Filling a Key Post

By CLYDE H. FARNSWORTH

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24 — Jacob A. Frenkel, a leading international economist. who has taught for the last 13 years at the University of Chicago, will become research chief at the International Monetary Fund, succeeding William C. Hood, a former deputy finance minister of Canada, who is retiring.

An announcement has yet to be made, but people at the I.M.F. and in international monetary circles confirmed the appointment of the 43-year-old, Israel-born academic to the key post at the 151-nation lending agency. Mr. Frenkel himself could not be reached.

At the same the I.M.F.'s sister agency, the World Bank, is losing its research chief this year. Anne O. Krueger, brought to the bank in 1982 by its former president, A. W. Clausen, has quit as vice president for economics and research to join her husband, Prof. James Mitchell Henderson, on the economics faculty of Duke University at Durham, N.C.

"I had never planned to make the bank a long-term career," Mrs. Krueger said in a telephone interview. "I never thought I could spend more than four or five years in this job." She is a specialist in trade and development economics.

Her replacement has yet to be announced. The appointment will be watched closely as an indication of the policy direction in which Barber B. Conable Jr., the new president, wants to take the World Bank.

I.M.F. sources said the appointment of Mr. Frenkel was firm as director of the research department and economic counselor to the managing director, even though the managing director, Jacques de Larosière, has just announced that he, too, will be leaving at the end of this year. Mr. Frenkel will start at the I.M.F. on Jan. 2.

Fed Approves Underwriting

The Federal Reserve Board has approved an unusual structure that would allow a subsidiary of a commercial bank holding company to participate in a public securities underwriting.

Under the structure, the underwriter, Lazard Frères & Company, would be allowed to avoid using a retail brokerage house in the underwriting — as would usually be the case in this kind of deal — thus reducing the overall fees an investor pays. Instead, Lazard Frères is bringing in Charles Schwab & Company, a discount broker that is a subsidiary of the BankAmerica Corporation, to process orders from retail customers.

The underwriting, which is expected to be offered within the next 10 days, is for the Schafer Value Trust Inc., a closed-end investment fund intended as a conservative, long-term stock investment. Shares will be offered at $9 each, for a [illegible] seemed inclined today to minimize whatever gap has opened up.

Volcker's Position on The Dollar

"You can read these things too finely," he said in a briefing for reporters after Mr. Volcker's testimony this morning. When asked directly whether the dollar had fallen enough, he responded that "we don't get into commentary" on exchange rates.

But if the two sides are in basic disagreement, that could result in a loss of operational coordination on the dollar since the Fed and the Treasury must both be intimately involved in any decision to sell or buy dollars in the currency markets.

Disagreement could also mean lack of a united front in coming talks with other countries. In addition to the I.M.F.-World Bank meetings, the so-called Group of Five and Group of Seven countries have scheduled sessions for later this week.

G-7 consists of the G-5 members — the United States, Japan, West Germany, Britain and France — plus Canada and Italy.

West Germany Singled Out

One of this morning's witnesses, Robert D. Hormats, suggested after the three-hour session that Mr. Baker might have been seeking to establish a strong negotiating position and that Mr. Volcker's observations on the dollar might have been simply an effort to calm the currency markets at a critical juncture.

But Mr. Hormats, a former top economic official in the State Department who now works for Goldman, Sachs & Company, also thought it significant that Mr. Volcker singled out West Germany as seeming to be doing its part to spur growth.

"There have been some signs in some major foreign countries recently, most notably Germany, of a resurgence of domestic demand after a considerable period of sluggishness," Mr. Volcker said in his statement. "There appears to be growing recognition of the crucial importance of sustaining that demand."

The Administration official also acknowleged the faster German growth and said it must continue.

Mr. Volcker, who called July's $18 billion trade deficit "disastrous," said he was not entirely surprised that it has taken so long to turn the trade gap around and predicted it would begin to shrink "in the next quarter or two."

Honeywell Retreat From Computers

a whole lot less difficult than integrating Sperry and Burroughs," which have incompatible computer lines.

The exact nature of Honeywell's plans was still not known yesterday. All three companies approved the wording of a vague announcement, issued by Honeywell, stating their intention to negotiate. In Minneapolis, Kathy H. Tunheim, a Honeywell spokesman, said, "We hope for an agreement by year's end."

But NEC and Bull said they had heard nothing specific. "We still do not have a concrete idea from Honeywell," said Koichi Shimbo, a spokesman for NEC in New York. In Paris, a spokesman for Groupe Bull, named for the Norwegian inventor Fredrik R. Bull, a pioneer in the development of statistical processors, said talks were "very preliminary."

After a brief rise following the announcement, Honeywell's stock fell back yesterday, closing at $70.50 a share, off $1.375, on the New York Stock Exchange.

Most of the benefits of a Honeywell-NEC-Bull consortium, analysts said, would probably accrue to NEC, which manufactures Honeywell's top-of-the-line mainframes. The Japanese company has not had an effective marketing outlet in the United States.

Bull, which makes Honeywell's DPS 7 minicomputer, is in a more precarious financial state. It is recovering from several years of losses in Europe, its main market, and is scheduled to be "privatized" by the French Government in the next several years. Some analysts doubt that it is prepared to make a large commitment in a deal with Honeywell.

Early Success Faded

Honeywell's retreat from computers comes nearly three decades after its technology was briefly considered some of the industry's hottest. In the early 1960's, it decided to go head-to-head with I.B.M., and succeeded in selling machines to a number of commercial customers and to Federal agencies, particularly the Pentagon.

With the acquisition of General Electric's computer division in 1970, Honeywell hoped to reach a critical mass. But the strategy failed. By the early 1980's, many of Honeywell's biggest customers were defecting to I.B.M. for access to more computer power and more software.

In recent years, Honeywell's chairman, Edson W. Spencer, and his second-in-command, James J. Renier, tried a different tack: integrate the computer operations with Honeywell's thriving aerospace and military businesses and its controls business, where it is the market leader in environmental controls for buildings and process controls for industry.

Last week, Honeywell announced that it was negotiating to buy Sperry's aerospace business. A Honeywell spokesman said yesterday that those negotiations were unaffected by the developments announced yesterday.

A Report On Apparel

tors can. An 8-minute film in the Milliken Textile Company's booth stresses that among the advantages of domestic manufacturers are their proximity to retailers, and their freedom from customs' red tape. The company is advocating an industry-wide computer network to allow faster replacement of orders.

Foreign manufacturers, one convention participant said, are "cheap but not fast," and would have difficulty in this area with a domestic system that filled orders in weeks, rather than months. The first step in the quick-response plan was taken in June, when a group of manufacturers agreed to put on garment tags the universal product codes long used in grocery stores.

Another much-discussed topic is TC², industry shorthand for the Tailored Clothing Technical Corporation, a consortium of manufacturers and labor unions.

An Automated Sewing Machine

The group's goal is to create low-cost, low-labor machinery, but progress so far has been slow. This week, nearly seven years after the group first met, it introduced its first creation — an automated sewing machine that reduces the time spent handling fabric. It is now being tested by the Palm Beach Company and Hartmarx Inc., both apparel manufacturers.

Also receiving attention here is the "Crafted with Pride in U.S.A." campaign, which was begun a year ago. Robert Swift, executive director of the campaign, announced this week that such celebrities as Ted Danson, Christie Brinkley, Robert Stack and Billy Dee Williams will appear in next year's television advertisements. The $13 million ad campaign has increased customer awareness, Mr. Swift said. By last June 80 percent of the respondents in a marketing study had seen the ads and 53 percent of those had sought out the American label.

Advocates of all these approaches say that American manufacturers must try every possible option — strengthening domestic companies while recognizing that competition from imports is inevitable.

Brash New Financial Breed Making Its Mark in London

domestic securities business open to all kinds of institutions.

This huge dose of free-market policy is bringing sweeping changes in the structure, style and sociology of the City of London, the square-mile financial district here. And beyond the City, it is the cutting edge of a broad effort by the Government of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher to make the British economy more competitive and change public attitudes toward business.

Surprisingly, the nation that produced Adam Smith and led the Industrial Revolution has long deprecated business as "mere trade," and scorned the go-getting entrepreneur as somehow second rate.

Britain's model of success remains the country gentleman. Many outsiders would agree with Siegmund Warburg, a Hamburg refugee who became a leading London banker, who once said, "Britain's blood pressure isn't high enough." Mrs. Thatcher is trying to change that, using open markets as the agent of reform.

Cartels Ruled Financial Realm

For decades, the London securities industry amounted to a handful of neatly — and profitably — divided cartels, with brokers, traders, merchant banks and commercial banks each given a separate franchise. Now, all these barriers are being sundered at once, replacing the gentleman's rules with a free-for-all.

It used to be said that the way to identify a partner in a British brokerage or merchant bank was that he arrived at work carrying a copy of The London Standard, an afternoon daily that hits newsstands just before 11 A.M. No longer.

At the merchant bank Kleinwort Benson Ltd., the workday begins at 8:30 A.M. "Five years ago, people here would have been quite surprised by that," noted Robin T. Fox, the vice chairman. "And 10 years ago, no one would have believed it."

Given the longer hours, the English ideal of living well out of town in a country estate has become a burden. "With the days starting earlier and ending later, I've had to get accommodations in London this year," said Lord Camoys, chief executive of Barclays de Zoete Wedd, the new merchant bank and securities arm of Barclays Bank.

Still more striking is the change in the makeup of the City. The divisions of background and class used to be as clear as the regulatory barriers separating different institutions.

At one end were the merchant bankers, whose world was based on the 39-year-old chose Merrill Lynch Europe Ltd., where he will head its new gilt-trading unit.

Today, talent and performance often determine success, not breeding or connections. Like many of his new colleagues, Mr. Hutchinson is a graduate of a grammar school, the British equivalent of an American high school. "With the restrictions dropped, there just wasn't enough trading talent to go around," Mr. Hutchinson explained. "That's why the recruiting, compensation and everything else for people with those skills just went 'pow.' "

The Big Bang

A New Era for the City of London

Second article of a series appearing periodically.

Mr. Neild of Phillips & Drew is another example. Educated at the University of Liverpool and Manchester University, he rose to become the City's top-rated economist. Now, the blunt-spoken 40-year-old is directing the Big Bang strategy for Phillips & Drew, which has become a subsidiary of the Union Bank of Switzerland.

"The artistocracy is in decline in the City, and the cloth-cap professionals are in the ascent," Mr. Neild said. "And we will take over."

And with established firms moving into unfamiliar businesses, young people are moving up fast. David Lough, the 36-year-old chief executive of County NatWest Capital Markets, commented: "The position I have now didn't exist a few years ago."

'Money Is The New Club'

The impact of the new wealth in the City is already evident well beyond the square-mile confines of London's financial district. "Money is the new club," the Spectator declared earlier this year. The conservative British weekly defined the club as young, mostly aged 26 to 34, and earning the equivalent of $110,000 a year. "Perhaps there are only a couple of thousand," the magazine stated, "but they are so mobile and noisy that they give the impression of being far more numerous."

But the high salaries in the City have also attracted widespread criticism. Partly, this concern reflects the traditional British attitude that, put bluntly, it is wholly acceptable to have considerable wealth, but far less guide for London. Since 1975, the profits of member firms on the New York Stock Exchange rose from $415 million to $2.1 billion last year, while employment in the securities industry rose from 67,000 to 129,000.

The Thatcher Government has pointed to Wall Street as proof of the benefits of deregulating the securities markets. But A. Gary Klesch, who was director of capital markets policy at the Treasury Department in 1975, notes that the Wall Street boom over the last decade reflected many forces, including reduced capital-gains taxes, rising incomes and other developments, not just opening up the securities market.

"Adjustments in the securities markets aren't going to mean much if you have a punitive tax system, declining industries not being replaced by new ones, an elitist education system and outdated labor relations," said Mr. Klesch, now chairman of Quadrex Securities Ltd., a specialist merchant bank in London.

The Thatcher Rationale

But more-efficient capital markets, according to the Thatcher Government, will not only increase wealth and employment in the securities industry, but also reduce financing costs for British companies, stimulate the formation of venture capital for new businesses and encourage wider share ownership by the British public. All are vital elements in Mrs. Thatcher's campaign to instill the "spirit of enterprise" in the British economy.

The economic benefits of wide-open financial markets are apparent in the London-based international markets that exist alongside the domestic securities business in the City of London. Largely unregulated, these global markets, such as Eurobonds and foreign-currency trading, are booming.

"The City of London in recent years has been an enormous success story," said Michael Howard, undersecretary of state of the Department of Trade and Industry, who is overseeing changes in Britain's financial legislation.

During the last two years, the domestic industry has been reshaped by a wave of mergers, as new players eagerly jumped into the securities business, while British brokers and traders sought well-heeled partners for the additional capital needed to survive in the new risk-taking environment ahead. Big buyers in this $2 billion-plus shopping spree include Citibank, Chase Manhattan Bank, Union Bank of Switzerland and the HongKong and Shanghai Bank.

Still, others besides Mr. Klesch believe that the overall benefits from the Big Bang will depend largely on Britain's broader economic and political policies.

"The majority of people in Britain have not decided whether they want a socialist or a capitalist system," said Stanislas Yassukovich, chairman of Merrill Lynch Europe Ltd, who has lived in London for 26 years. "In that sense, the context for deregulation here is totally different from in the United States. And I am skeptical whether the benefits in terms of wealth generation and employment will show the same pattern we saw on Wall Street."

The New York Times/Paul Hosefros

Traders at Phillips & Drew having breakfast at 7:30 A.M. in the company dining room. The more competitive financial scene in London has resulted in earlier starts and a faster pace at many brokerage houses.

HERE'S ONE PROFILE

James private clubs. It was a closed and exclusive fraternity, determined largely by family and social connections. One British merchant banker noted that his firm had an unspoken rule governing nepotism: You could bring one son into the firm, but the second had to make it in on merit.

At the opposite end of the social scale were the traders, known as "barrow boys," with their East End accents, their working-class lineage and schooling, and an aggressiveness that the upper-class merchant bankers found downright unseemly.

But the old order is being turned upside down. With more competition, profits will depend not on fixed commissions but on an ability to trade nimbly and read market movements.

"In these markets, it's the streetwise guys who do the best," said Christopher H. Maytum, head of fixed-income trading for County NatWest Capital Markets Ltd., the merchant banking arm of Britain's largest bank, National Westminster.

Suddenly, it is the sharp traders who are most in demand, being assiduously courted and offered six-figure salaries. When John Hutchinson decided last year to leave Wedd Durlacher Mordaunt & Company, where he was chief trader in British treasury securities called "gilts," he was flooded with job offers. Eventually,

That attitude prevails among Britons of every political persuasion. Writing about the City earlier this year, Roy Jenkins of the Social Democratic Party quoted Stanley Baldwin, three times a Conservative prime minister, who once said, "A man who made a million quick ought not to be in the House of Lords, but in jail." Mr. Jenkins, a former Chancellor of the Exchequer, concluded, "A touch of this spirit would not do any harm in the City today."

A deeper worry is that the new City wealth will increase polarization and resentment in a society where 13 percent of the work force is unemployed, where, by American standards, social mobility has been limited and where wealth has long been seen more as a symbol of privilege than of initiative.

"People here will become increasingly disturbed by one group gaining extraordinary wealth for creating nothing, for simply turning over money," said Charles John Constable, director general of British Institute of Management. "British attitudes are quite different from those in America."

Indeed, the social and political context is far different from the United States, raising questions as to whether the post-May Day experience on Wall Street will be a reliable

Hunts' Plea Against Judge

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 24 (AP) — Companies owned by the Hunt brothers asked a Federal appeals court today to remove District Judge Barefoot Sanders of Dallas from all proceedings involved with their bankruptcy case.

The Placid Oil Company, a subsidiary, and the William Herbert Hunt Trust Estate contended to the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit that Judge Sanders had possible business ties to banks involved in the case.

Earlier this month, Judge Sanders denied similar motions by the Hunts to remove himself from the case.

The Hunts wanted Judge Sanders to step down on the ground that the judge sits on an investment company board with lawyers for a firm representing one of the 23 banks that want to foreclose on $1.5 billion in past due loans to the Hunts.

The Hunts also argued that Judge Sanders's ownership of bank stock prejudiced him, even though he does not own shares of the banks involved in Placid's petition for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the bankruptcy code.

The Hunts are suing the banks for $13.8 billion because of a dispute over the restructuring of the loans.

Placid, the subsidiary and the William Herbert Hunt Trust Estate filed for reorganization in August. The companies, owned by Nelson Bunker Hunt, William Herbert Hunt and Lamar Hunt, originally filed their bankruptcy suit in New Orleans, but Judge Sanders ordered it moved to Dallas.

Japan Reports Export Decline

TOKYO, Sept. 24 (AP) — Japan's exports are slowing because of the yen's growing strength, and that is putting a drag on production and the economy in general, a Government report said today.

The report from the Economic Planning Agency said shipments of steel, chemical products and machinery were especially slack, as exports slid 3.6 percent in August from the previous month, the sixth consecutive monthly decline.

In the last year, the yen's value against the dollar has risen by about 40 percent, making Japanese products more expensive overseas.

At the end of the January-March quarter, the Japanese economy contracted for the first time in 11 years. In the next three months it registered inflation-adjusted growth of nine-tenths of 1 percent.

The report said the strong yen had forced manufacturers to curb production and investment in the face of poor overseas sales. At the same time, domestic demand was holding steady, the report said.

Seeking Curbs On Volatility

STILL stunned by the stock market debacle of Sept. 11 and 12 that was caused in part by program trading of stock index futures and options, traders in New York and Chicago, where most futures and options contracts are traded, are divided about what can or should be done to avoid a repeat of the impact.

The topic continued to be aired this week as discussion centered both on the effect on last Friday's "triple witching hour" of the Securities and Exchange Commission's voluntary experiment to curb volatility and a report in The New York Times yesterday that the commission was considering a number of new approaches. These include limiting the number of index options an investor can hold at any one time and raising margin requirements.

None of those interviewed yesterday said that the issue, which has been under scrutiny by the S.E.C. for some months, should be abandoned.

"For two years I have given a speech about the benefits of derivative products," said Jeffrey Miller, a general partner at Miller, Tabak, Hirsch & Company, an investment banking and trading firm. "But the developments of Sept. 11 and Sept. 12 have at the very least led me to reassess that position.

Mr. Miller's firm was one of the first on Wall Street to recognize that profits could be made by taking advantage of differences between the price of stock index futures and the underlying stocks. That activity, which has come to be known as program trading, has up to now been the focus of the S.E.C.'s concern.

Initially, the S.E.C. suspected that such activity was pretty much limited to "triple witching hour" Fridays, those four days each year when stock index futures, stock index options and individual stock options all expire.

However, for no apparent reason stock prices moved sharply downward 11 days in advance of June's expiration day. And the 120-point decline in the Dow Jones industrial average recorded on Sept. 11 and 12 came a week before this quarter's witching hour.

So-called program trades were originally suspected to be the source of such instability. However, over the last year a number of other players who were not much of a force before have become involved in stock index futures, traders point out. The new players include money managers supplying portfolio insurance, and index funds. Together, those entities manage nearly $200 billion in assets.

Unlike so-called program traders, these groups take no additional positions in the underlying stocks when they are hedging the market. Their primary goal is to preserve the value of their portfolios by buying or selling stock index futures.

Together with the so-called program traders, these entities represent about a third of the trading in stock index futures, according to Morgan Stanley Capital Markets.

The growth of the market has made the S.E.C.'s job of figuring out what it might need to do that much more difficult.

"They are not all the same players and they do have different impacts" on the market, Brandon Becker, associate director in the division of market regulation at the S.E.C., said in a recent interview. " But we have not seen evidence that index arbitrage itself is the first cause of one of these swings."

A number of factors, of course, help to determine what makes a market move, most of which have nothing to do with the interrelationship between futures, options and underlying stocks.

"The stock market has gone up or down for many, many years without futures or options," said William J. Brodsky, president of the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, where the popular Standard & Poor's 500 index future is traded.

"We have done a lot of looking at the events surrounding the market situation on Sept. 11, and there were a lot of things happening in Japan and Europe before the New York Stock Exchange ever opened its doors."

The S.E.C. has been careful not to cast blame on such markets, saying they provide liquidity and efficiency that previously did not exist. And investment professionals say that the results of last week's triple witching hour, as well as events surrounding trading on Sept. 11 and Sept. 12, need to be examined much more closely before additional steps should be recommended.

Indeed, one of the problems confronting the S.E.C., which governs securities firms, is that i has no jurisdiction over commodity trading, which is regulated by the Commodity Futures Tradin Commission.

"The S.E.C. should survey the Sept. 11 activitie of a dozen or so firms and construct an anatomy what happened on that day," Mr. Miller said. " you did that you might be able to see what y might want to change, if you want to change an thing at all."

Charles A. Baker, senior vice president at Lela O'Brien Rubenstein Associates Inc., the natio largest portfolio insurance firm, with $4.5 bill under management, said that making imbala orders public before the close of trading — a element in the S.E.C.'s experiment last Friday should be continued and adopted by the commo exchanges as well.

"We aren't required to do it, but we try to pronounce to all participants in the futures ma what we are going to do, when we are going to and for how much," Mr. Baker said. "We fee is a stabilizing technique, not a destabilizing o

Dow Advances 5.48 Points, to 1,803.29

A moderate increase in stock prices yesterday gave Wall Street its third consecutive gain, but trading volume remained weak and investor nervousness was evident in a sharp and unexplained selloff of some highly regarded technology stocks.

Still, the Dow Jones industrial average managed a 5.48-point rise, to 1,803.29, closing above the 1,800 level for the first time in two weeks.

But the Dow's achievement did not come easily. Up 10 points early in the session on the strength of the bond market, the index fell back as the day wore on before finally getting back some of its forward momentum.

As happened on Tuesday, the blue-chip index strained as it approached the 1,800 level. "The rational person does not worry about that anymore," [illegible] vice president of weakness in such high-tech stocks as I.B.M., down 1¾, to 137½; Digital Equipment, down 2½, to 93⅛; Cray Research 3¼, to 81¾, and Honeywell, 1⅞, to 70. Honeywell said it might merge its computer business with two foreign companies.

There was speculation that the Gartner Group, a respected Connecticut research firm, had issued a warning on all technology shares. But Fran Saldutti, Gartner's research director, said that the rumor was not true and that his firm had reiterated a note of caution only on Cray.

But even Gartner's denial failed to help technology issues recover. Wall Street analysts believe the market's poor showing over the last few weeks has made investors very wary of stocks that are falling in price, especially [illegible] occur-topped losers, 918 to 643.

Trading volume rose, but by just a little, to 134.6 million shares from the 132.6 million on Tuesday.

Drug Stocks Strong

Drug stocks were strong yesterday because of recommendations by Prudential-Bache Securities, E. F. Hutton and Merrill Lynch. Squibb gained 3¾, to 105; Merck rose 2⅞, to 102, and Johnson & Johnson was up 1½, to 64⅛. A weaker dollar would help companies such as these, which sell heavily overseas.

USX led the active list, falling ⅜, to 22⅞, on consolidated volume of nearly 4.4 million shares.

Caterpillar fell 5⅛, to 40⅝, and was the second-busiest stock, with more than 3.2 million shares trading. The tractor maker said it expects a third-quarter loss, compared with a profit

Stock Tables Explained

Consolidated trading comprises trades on the New York, American, Philadelphia, Boston, Midwest, Cincinnati and Pacific Stock Exchanges. Also included are trades in listed stocks reported by the National Association of Securities Dealers and Instinet. Quotations are transmitted by the Associated Press.

The abbreviation of a company's name is followed by the current annual dividend per share, which is based on the latest quarterly or semiannual declaration, unless otherwise noted. Yld stands for yield, or the percentage return represented by the annual dividend at the current stock price. PE refers to the price-earnings ratio, that is, the number of times by which the company's latest 12-month earnings must be multiplied to obtain the current stock price.

Sales 100's, refers to the volume of shares in consolidated trading. Thus, 150 in the sales column would mean 15,000 shares traded. A z preceding the volume figure means the sales are stated in full.

Stock prices are stated in dollar amounts; thus, 50¼ means $50.25. The 52-Week High and Low columns show the highest and the lowest price of the stock in consolidated trading during the preceding 52 weeks. The High, Low and Last columns refer to the day's trading prices. A u in the High column indicates a new 52-week high. A d in the Low column indicates a new 52-week low. Chg. is the difference— plus, minus or no change— between the day's last reported price and the previous closing price.

An s indicates a split or stock dividend of 25 percent or more has been paid. The stock's yearly price range has been adjusted from the old stock. v-Trading halted on primary market.

Special or extra dividends are indicated by the following footnotes:

a-Also extra or extras. b-Annual rate plus stock dividend. c-Liquidating dividend. e-Declared or paid in the preceding 12 months. g-Dividend and earnings in Canadian money. No yield or PE shown because the stock trades in U.S. dollars. h-Temporary exception to Nasdaq qualifications. i-Declared or paid after stock dividend or split-up. j-Paid this year, dividend omitted, deferred or no action taken at last dividend meeting. k-Declared or paid this year on a cumulative issue with dividends in arrears. n-New issue. pp-Holder owes one installment of purchase price. r-Declared or paid in the preceding 12 months plus stock dividend. †-Paid in stock in preceding 12 months, estimated cash value on ex dividend or ex distribution date.

Other footnotes: cld-Called. x-Ex dividend, that is any dividend payable on the stock is payable to the seller, not the buyer. y-Ex dividend and sales in full. x-dis-Ex distribution. xr-Ex rights. xw-Without warrants. ww-With warrants. wd-When distributed. wi-When issued. nd-Next day delivery. vi-In bankruptcy or receivership or being reorganized under the Bankruptcy Act, or securities assumed by such companies.

High Yen Cuts Toyota's Profit

TOKYO, Sept. 24 (AP) — The Toyota Motor Corporation said today that its earnings fell 14.9 percent in the latest year as a result of the yen's surge in value.

Net income in the 12 months ended June 30 was 345.5 billion yen, or about $2.24 billion at current exchange rates. That was down from a profit of 405.8 billion yen a year earlier. Sales fell 1.9 percent, to 6.64 trillion yen from 6.77 trillion yen.

Toyota attributed the weak performance to the steady appreciation of the yen against the dollar, which makes Japanese products more expensive in the United States. The Japanese currency has risen about 70 percent against the dollar since early 1985. The dollar now is worth about 154 yen.

Japan Credit For Mexico

TOKYO, Sept. 24 (AP) — The Export-Import Bank of Japan has agreed to extend Mexico $1 billion worth of credit for three major industrial projects, Mexico's Finance Minister, Gustavo Petrocioli, said today.

Mexico will use the loan for a steel plant, an oil pipeline and development of export-oriented industries, Mr. Petrocoli said at the Japan National Press Club. He met earlier today with the Ex-Im Bank president, Takashi Tanaka; Japan's Prime Minister, Yasuhiro Nakasone, and the Finance Minister, Kiichi Miyazawa.

Mr. Tanaka told Mr. Petrocioli the loan would be extended as long as the Mexican Government shared some of the financial burden for the projects. The loan also depends on the completion of talks by the International Monetary Fund, the Mexican Government and public and private loan institutions for an additional $12 billion in loans.

Shanghai Stock Market?

PEKING, Sept. 24 (AP) — Shanghai is studying the possibility of opening a stock market for the growing number of enterprises raising funds by offering shares, the official New China News Agency said today. Since last year, 749 factories in Shanghai have issued stock, the report said.

In the opinion of Bond Counsel, interest on the Series 1986-A Bonds is exempt from federal income taxation under the laws, regulations, rulings and judicial decisions existing on the date of the original delivery of the Series 1986-A Bonds. The Series 1986-A Bonds and the interest thereon are exempt from all taxation in the State of Tennessee except for State corporate and bank excise taxes measured by income and except for estate, gift and inheritance taxes. See "Pending Federal Tax Legislation" as described in the Official Statement for a brief description of certain pending legislation.

Chattanooga-Hamilton County Hospital Authority

Hospital Revenue and Refunding Bonds, Series 1986-A

(Erlanger Medical Center)

The Series 1986-A Bonds will be issued as fully registered bonds in the denomination of $5,000 or any integral multiple thereof. Principal of the Bonds will be payable at the principal office of the Paying Agent/Registrar. Interest on the Bonds is payable by check or draft mailed by the Paying Agent/Registrar to the registered owners thereof commencing April 1, 1987 and semiannually thereafter on October 1 and April 1 of each year.

The Series 1986-A Bonds are limited obligations of the Authority and do not constitute an indebtedness of the City of Chattanooga, Hamilton County, the State of Tennessee or any political subdivision thereof other than the Authority within the meaning of any constitutional provision or statutory limitation. The Bonds are secured by payments made pursuant to the Series A Note between the Authority and Erlanger Medical Center. The Medical Center pledges all legally available funds and revenues to the timely payment of the Series A Note.

The Series 1986-A Bonds are subject to redemption prior to maturity as more fully described in the Official Statement.

Indications Of Upturn

By ERIC SCHMITT

Yields on certificates of deposit, bank money market accounts and money market mutual funds, which had been declining for the last 10 weeks, showed signs of a turnaround in the week ended yesterday.

According to The Bank Rate Monitor's national index, yields on C.D.'s and money market accounts were affected by flattening interest rates. The average yield for six-month C.D.'s remained at 6.00 percent, while the average yield of bank money market accounts declined to 5.63 percent from 5.66 percent.

For C.D.'s with longer maturities, one-year certificates remained at 6.26 percent; two-and-a-half-year certificates were up 2 basis points, to 6.72 percent, and the five-year yield increased 3 basis points, to 7.23 percent.

"This portends the end of a downward cycle and the beginning of a modest, upward swing," said Robert K. Heady, publisher of The Bank Rate Monitor. "The only thing that could change the scenario would be another cut in the discount rate by the Fed before the November election. The odds on that happening are even money."

At the Treasury's weekly bill auction on Monday, often a strong influence on the interest rates that banks and thrift institutions pay to consumers, the average discount rate for three-month bills increased 9 basis points, to 5.25 percent, while six-month bills rose 5 basis points, to 5.39 percent.

hue's Money Fund Report attributed the continued drop in yields and rise in assets to the climate of falling short-term interest rates. The seven-day compounded average yield for taxable money market mutual funds computed by Donoghue's dropped 4 basis points, to 5.44 percent, while the 30-day compound average declined 10 basis points, to 5.55 percent.

Bank Money Accounts

Annual effective yields on money market accounts and six-month certificates of deposit at selected institutions on Wed., Sept. 24, 1986. Some six-month C.D. yields assume reinvestment after six months. Yields are based on the method of compounding and the rate stated yesterday for the lowest minimum to open an account, but minimums may vary. Higher yields may be offered for larger deposits. C.D. figures are for fixed rates only.

EQUITY-INCOME FUND

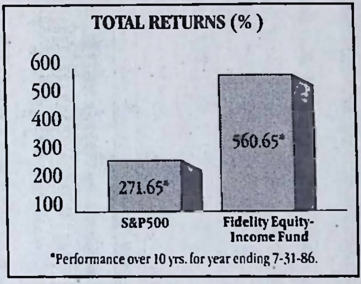
Fidelity sets a higher standard.

In the last 10 years, Fidelity's Equity-Income Fund has provided returns two times higher than that of Standard & Poor's 500.™ That means $10,000 invested in Equity-Income ten years ago would be worth $66,650.00[1] today.

While past performance is no guarantee of future results, this income-oriented stock fund has displayed consistent performance, despite market fluctuations. This makes Equity-Income Fund a good choice for any goal-oriented investor.

And remember, only Fidelity offers exchange privileges among more than 50 different Fidelity Funds.

For more information just mail in the attached coupon or call our toll-free number 24 hours a day. Minimum investment $1,000, $500 for IRA's.



*Performance over 10 yrs. for year ending 7-31-86.

[1] Figures are for total returns for 10 years (ending 7/31/86) and include change in share price, reinvestment of dividends and capital gains distributions and the fund's 2% sales charge. Figures update page 5 of the fund's Statement of Additional Information.

Standard & Poor's 500 is a trademark of Standard & Poor's Corporation (a widely-recognized unmanaged index of stock market performance).

Options Tables Explained

Options contracts to buy or sell 100 shares of a stock at a set price until a specified future date are traded in two forms. Call options give the holder the right to "call," or buy, the stock, while put options, marked by a p, give the holder the right to "put," or sell, the stock. The price at which the option may be exercised is called the striking price. All options, both calls and puts, have a buyer and a "writer," or seller. The buyer of a call option anticipates a rise in the price of the underlying stock, while the writer usually does not expect the price of the underlying stock to reach the option's striking price.

In the tables, the abbreviation of a company's name is followed by the striking price. The month headings identify the option's expiration date, and beneath is listed the option's premium, or purchase price. The N.Y. Close column gives the day's closing price of the underlying stock on the New York Stock Exchange. An r means the option was not traded, s means no option is offered.

PIPs have been incorporated as a feature of the Salomon Inc commercial paper program.

For information on PIPs and other commercial paper-based products please contact Michael J. Normile, Vice President, (212) 747-6019.

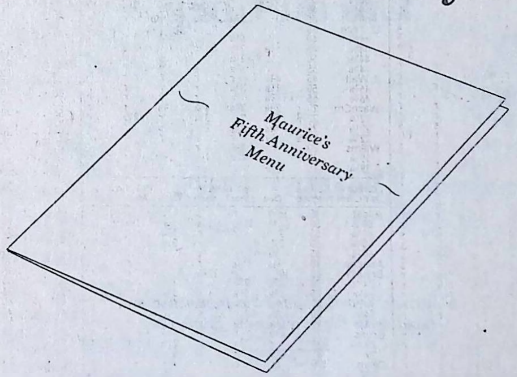
For the next six weeks we're offering the best of our last five years.



It's Maurice's Fifth Anniversary Menu and it highlights those celebrated dishes for which we earned four stars from Forbes magazine. You'll also enjoy such new culinary masterpieces as "Le Homard Rôti à la Vanille" (a special roasted lobster) and "L'entrecôte à la Japonaise" (a superbly marinated sirloin).

Reservations are a must. Because a menu like this only comes along once every five years.

Breakfast, 7:30–10 A.M., weekdays. Lunch, 12–2:30 P.M., weekdays. Dinner, 6–11 P.M., daily.

Bond Tables Explained

Bonds, interest-bearing debt certificates, are quoted in percentage of the par or face value of the bond, represented as 100. The name of the issuing company is followed by the original coupon or interest rate and the last two digits of the year of maturity.

Current yield represents the annual percentage return to the purchaser at the current price. The High, Low, and Last columns refer to the bond's price during the day, and Net Chge. is the difference between the day's closing price and the previous daily closing price. The majority of bonds and all municipal, or tax exempt bonds, are not listed on exchanges; rather, they are traded over the counter.

Other footnotes: cv-Bond is convertible into stock under specified conditions. cf-Certificates. dc-Deep discount issue. f-Dealt in flat— traded without accrued interest. m-Matured bonds. st-Stamped. ww-With warrants. x-Ex interest. xw-Without warrants. vi-In bankruptcy or receivership or being reorganized under the Bankruptcy Act, or securities assumed by such companies. zr-Zero coupon issue.

Treasury Bonds Rise Again

Demand Good For New Issue

BY MICHAEL QUINT

Prices of Treasury notes and bonds improved for the third consecutive day, spurred by reports of good demand for new four-year Treasury notes and weaker-than-expected car sales in mid-September.

Yesterday's gains follow sharp losses in the first three weeks of the month, when investors and speculators were heavy sellers on strong economic activity, fears of inflation and worries that continued declines in the dollar would discourage foreign investors. But in the last three days, bond prices have improved and the 7¼ percent 30-year Treasury issue has gained about 2¼ points from last week's lowest level, when its yield was about 7.84 percent. On Aug. 29, the 7¼ percent issue was at 100⅝ to yield 7.20 percent.

"There has been a subtle improvement in psychology, and the good investor demand at the note auctions has encouraged the dealers to own some longer securities," said Robert H. Schumacher, head of the government bond division at Harris Trust and Savings Bank. He added, "Statements by the European finance ministers have encouraged the market to put aside fears of a further declines in the dollar; there are no additional signs of inflation, and the car sales reported today were nothing special."

Long Bond Up Nearly a Point

By the time trading stopped in New York yesterday, the Treasury's bellwether 7¼ percent bond due in 2016 was up more than ⅞ point to an offered price of 95 18/32 and a yield of 7.63 percent. The new 6¾ percent Treasury notes due in 1990, which were auctioned with an average yield of 6.87 percent at 1 P.M., improved enough in late afternoon trading to reduce their yield to about 6.84 percent.

Reports of mid-September car sales at an annualized rate of about 11 million units were much less than the 13 million to 15 million units some analysts had expected. Although the incentive of low interest rate financing will keep September car sales high enough to sharply increase retail sales for the month, economists said the smaller-than-expected increases were another sign that consumer spending may not be strong enough to produce healthy economic growth in coming months.

Worries that a further drops in the dollar might discourage foreign buyers of dollar-denominated securities and create more inflation were further allayed yesterday morning when Federal Reserve Board chairman, Paul A. Volcker, told the House Ways and Means trade subcommittee that "we are now reasonably close to an appropriate adjustment" for the dollar and that he saw no need for additonal declines in the dollar "on anything like the scale or speed of the past 18 months." Mr. Volcker added that "there are still no clear signs that the trade deficit is declining."

Without some shrinking of the trade deficit, many economists expect that economic growth will remain weak enough to justify further Fed moves to reduce short-term interest rates.

Kaufman Sees Discount Rate Cuts

Henry Kaufman, chief economist at Salomon Brothers, said at a meeting of the Conference Board that subnormal economic growth was likely to continue and lower interest rates lie ahead. The Fed is likely to reduce the discount rate at least once, and possibly twice, before the decline in rates is over, Mr. Kaufman said. In the bond market, the economist estimated that yields on 30-year Treasury bonds would remain volatile and fluctuate between 7⅛ percent and 8 percent, but could drop below that level when the decline in the dollar was finished or when interest rates fell in Japan and West Germany.

"Any further increases in long-term interest rates will add to the stalling tendency in the economy," Mr. Kaufman said. He said that spending by households, which has been the mainstay of economic growth in recent quarters, is likely to diminish in the future.

Demand at the four-year note auction was good among commercial banks, where the combination of weak business-loan demands and strong inflows of funds into interest-bearing checking accounts has whetted the appetite for government securities. Banks' purchases have been heavy all year but seem to have accelerated in the last three months.

Between June 25 and Sept. 10, Federal Reserve Board data for all large weekly reporting banks show that they have added more than $3.4 billion to their holdings of Treasury and agency issues due in one through five years and nearly $5.2 billion to their holdings of issues due in more than five years. Much of the increase in holdings due in more than five years is accounted for by mortgage pass-through securities that have a long stated maturity, but a much shorter estimated average life.

In government agency financing, the Farm Credit System offered new three-month bonds at 5.70 percent and six-month bonds at 5.80 percent.

Poll Sees Rise In Pessimism

A growing number of Americans believe that the economic recovery will sputter by the end of 1987, although more people still predict continued growth, according to a Gallup Poll to be released today.

Of those surveyed, 39 percent said they believed that the recovery would slow by the end of next year, while 46 percent said a strong economy would prevail through 1988, and 15 percent were undecided.

In comparison, a Gallup Poll last March showed that 32 percent of those asked said the economy would begin to stall by the end of 1987, while 58 percent were more bullish and 10 percent were undecided.

The latest findings were based on nationwide telephone interviews conducted with 978 people, 18 years of age or older, from Sept. 3 to Sept. 17.

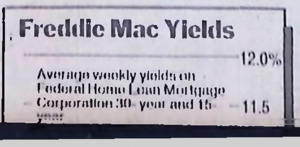
Federal Agency Selects Adviser on Asset Sales



Freddie Mac Yields

Average weekly yields on Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation 30-year and 15-year

Federal agencies that expect to sell assets next year to help reduce the Federal budget deficit have begun selecting financial advisers for those sales.

The Department of Agriculture, for example, announced yesterday that the Manufacturers Hanover Trust Company had been selected as financial adviser to the Farmers Home Administration, which is tentatively scheduled to sell $1 billion of loans worth about $555 million by the end of this year or early in 1987.

While securities dealers criticize the asset sales as an artificial means of reducing the budget deficit that does not correct the imbalance between spending and revenues, they stand to gain new business from the financings. More than 30 firms expressed interest in advising the Farmers Home Administration, and securities dealers agree they will earn more profit from selling Federal assets than from distributing an equal amount of Treasury securities. The Senate has proposed selling nearly $7 billion of assets, while the House has proposed sales of about $8.3 billion.

The Farmers Home Administration loans, which are not guaranteed or insured by the Federal Government, were issued to various local governments and authorities to finance projects, such as water and sewer systems. The Rural Development Insurance Fund, from which the loans to be sold will be selected, has about $8 billion of assets, divided into 24,000 separate loans to 12,000 different borrowers.

According to Vance Clark, administrator of the Farmers Home Administration, interest on loans to local governments and authorities would be eligible for exemption from Federal income tax once the loans are sold. He said that the agency, which expects to make another $625 million of similar loans in the fiscal year 1987, issues the loans at interest rates as low as 5 percent for some poor rural areas. The rural loans are financed with money borrowed from the Federal Financing Bank, which in turn borrows from the Treasury.

Snohomish County Refunding

The Snohomish County, Wash., Public Utility District is offering $311.5 million of electric revenue refunding bonds with a maximum yield tentatively set at 8.18 percent for bonds due in 2015, through underwriters led by the First Boston Corporation.

Serial bonds included in the financing yield from 6 percent in 1989 to 7.60 percent in 1996 and 7.90 percent in 2001. Other long-term bonds were tentatively priced with an 8.05 percent yield for bonds due in 2006 and 8 percent for discount-priced 5 percent bonds due in 2020. A lower yield of 7.49 percent was offered on bonds due in 2019 that are insured by Bond Investors Guaranty Inc.

Backed by the district's electricity sales, the bonds are rated Baa-1 by Moody's Investors Service and BBB+ by the Standard & Poor's Corporation, except for the insured bonds, which are rated triple A by both rating agencies.

Snohomish, which includes suburbs north of Seattle, is a member of the Washington Public Power Supply System, and owned a 13 percent share in the nuclear projects 4 and 5 whose cancellation led to the default on $2.25 billion of outstanding bonds.

Pork Contracts Suffer Another Steep Decline

By The Associated Press

Pork futures prices collapsed again yesterday, falling the daily allowable limit for the third consecutive session.

Analysts said the market was still wobbling from a Government report released Monday showing the hog population was far higher than had been expected.

The nearby hog contracts retreated the 1½-cents-a-pound limit on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange and pork bellies were down the limit of 2 cents.

On other markets, livestock futures slumped, and coffee was down the limit.

Pork futures were "a real disaster," said Philip Stanley, an analyst in Chicago with Thomson McKinnon Securities Inc.

"We really didn't have that bad a cash market," he said. But hog futures were devastated, he said, by "spillover selling from bellies and continuing reaction to the report."

Technical factors were critical, he said, with hogs and bellies repeatedly slipping to levels that touched off more sell orders.

Mr. Stanley and other analysts said yesterday that they now had doubts about the reliability of hog-census reports issued earlier this year by the Government.

Coffee plunged the 4-cents-a-pound limit on the Coffee, Sugar and Cocoa Exchange in New York. The December contract, on which there is no limit, was down 4.49 cents and settled at $2.1217 a pound.

Soybean futures prices declined, while corn was higher on the Chicago Board of Trade.

Beans came under pressure from indications that sales from Government stocks were picking up in some locations, said Dale Gustafson, an analyst with Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. Also, he said, beans were undercut by weather forecasts predicting a drying trend that would allow harvesting to resume this week in some areas.

Explanations

Next to the name of each futures contract and option in the table is an abbrevation of the exchange on which it is traded. Also listed are the minimum size of the futures contract or option and the monetary units represented by the figures in the table. Open interest is the number of contracts outstanding each month and not liquidated by delivery of the commodity or by an offsetting contract Key to the exchanges.

showed little movement. Bullion was unchanged from Tuesday at $431 an ounce at 4 P.M. at Republic National Bank in New York.

In testimony before a House subcommittee, Mr. Volcker said he believed that the dollar had declined enough against foreign currencies over the last 18 months and that other policies were needed to take care of America's trade problems. Mr. Volcker also said that further dollar declines could threaten to renew inflation in this country.

His comments contrasted with Treasury Secretary James A. Baker 3d's remarks last week that the Reagan Administration was prepared to push the dollar lower unless America's trading partners did more to stimulate their own economies. Mr. Baker's remarks sparked a two-day slide in the dollar. But dealers said Mr. Volcker's testimony had little effect on the dollar.

Dealers characterized yesterday's trading as cautious, in advance of this week's meetings of the five leading industrial countries. Some analysts have speculated that the meetings could produce further central bank interest-rate cuts, which could push the dollar lower.

"Basically, we see the dollar has been marking time," said Larry Kreicher, an assistant vice president for Irving Trust. "People are guessing there's some kind of deal being worked out at the G-5 meeting. They prefer to stay on the sidelines."

The British pound sagged on news that Britain had run up a record trade deficit of £886 million, or almost $1.29 billion, in August. The pound declined to $1.4450 late yesterday in London from $1.4512 late Tuesday. Later, in New York, sterling was unchanged from late Tuesday at $1.4470.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar closed at 154.20 Japanese yen, up from 154.10 yen Monday. Japanese markets were closed on Tuesday for a public holiday. At the end of the trading day in New York, the dollar was at 154.17 yen, down from 154.70 late Tuesday.

Other late dollar rates in Europe, compared with Tuesday's late rates, included: 2.0500 West German marks, up from 2.0480; 1.6595 Swiss francs, up from 1.6568; 6.7080 French [illegible] francs, down from 1.6585; 1.38785 Canadian dollars, up from 1.38725; 6.7015 French francs, down from 6.7170, and 1,414.00 Italian lire, down from 1,416.75.

Gold for current delivery rose 30 cents, to $431.50 an ounce, on the Commodity Exchange in New York.

In Zurich, gold closed at $433 an ounce, compared with $432 late Tuesday. In London, the late bid for gold was $432.50 an ounce, compared with late Tuesday's $432.75. Earlier in Hong Kong, gold closed at $433.76 an ounce, up from Tuesday's $432.75.

'87 Gain Seen In Chip Sales

SANTA CLARA, Calif., Sept. 24 (AP) — Sales of semiconductors should rise about 22 percent in the United States and 20 percent worldwide next year, according to an annual survey of industry executives.

Sales of semiconductors, the tiny circuits in the heart of computers, are hard to predict, however. Last year's survey said American sales would increase 25 percent in 1986, but the gain now looks more like 7 percent.

Although far better than the 30 percent sales drop in 1985, this year's modest improvement is still sluggish for an industry that had come to expect double-digit annual growth.

The worldwide survey of 42 chip makers was conducted by WSTS Inc. American sales of semiconductors should total $8.7 billion this year and are expected to rise to $10.6 billion next year plus 28 percent more in 1988, to $13.5 billion, the report said.

Worldwide sales will jump from $26.5 billion in 1986 to $31.9 billion in 1987 and $39.1 billion in 1988, according to the report.

First in a two-part series.

The man in charge—it could as easily be a woman—swears by his intuition. You prefer focus groups.

He likes to sleep on decisions. You're ready to roll right now.

He requires written reports. You'd opt for informal chats.

Something's got to be done to keep up efficiency and still keep down your systolic pressure.

Go around him? Too dangerous. Gripe? Too unproductive. Quit? Too final.

Instead, try managing up.

It's a relatively new phrase in the corporate vocabulary—until recently, much less written about than managing down by B-school profs. But not because managing up is unimportant.

Failure to manage up has been listed among the ten leading reasons why some executives stumble on the ladder to top management. And it's clear that those who get ahead most successfully often have learned how to work toward mutual satisfaction with their bosses, even when working styles or personalities are strikingly different.

Most important, how healthy you are frequently may be influenced by how healthy your relationship is with your boss.

Next week: a few ways to help yourself to feel "up" by learning to manage up.

Arch Gives Insurer A Theme

IN three quite different markets, the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company has begun testing the communication ability of a new, very striking commercial.

With the help of its new agency, Doyle Graf Mabley of New York, it is seeking to find out if the advertising is being remembered and changing attitudes toward the company and to determine the most economically efficient frequency for running the commercial.

The markets are Philadelphia, where the company is based; Birmingham, Ala., and Columbus, Ohio. The tests began Monday, and Penn Mutual will be spending $750,000 to run the ads in the test markets during the remainder of the year.

All the advertising — there are a 60-second and a 30-second version of the spot — will run in prime-time television, a first for the 139-year-old company.

Then, according to Thomas Mabley, executive vice president and creative director of the agency, the campaign should be ready to expand next year to as many as 20 markets nationwide and unleash a budget of up to $6 million.

At his last agency, Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein, Mr. Mabley was the creative director responsible for the beautifully produced "Charlie Chaplin" TV commercials for the I.B.M. personal computer.

He has convinced his new clients from Philadelphia of the need for superb production values when competing for viewer attention on the busy video screen. In his words, "You've got to have quality material to compete with quality."

That is why Mr. Mabley and his team went out to the Kaleidoscope studio in Los Angeles and got the services of Caleb Deschanel, the director of photography on such well-received feature films as "The Natural," "The Black Stallion" and "The Right Stuff."

Production costs were in the neighborhood of $200,000, Mr. Mabley said, which is not bad considering that the average commercial costs $124,930, according to the Association of National Advertisers.

The Penn Mutual spot has a spokesman standing in front of a backlighted, five-story post-modern arch. As he proceeds with his spiel, he proceeds up a construction elevator to a point near the summit of the arch through the Washington office of J. Walter Thompson, he had a particularly unusual honing of his writing and advertising skills. He worked for both the Structured Clay Products Institute and the Home Manufacturers Association. That gave him experience to build upon.

Quaker Oats Assigns Golden Grains Brands

The Quaker Oats Company announced yesterday that it was assigning two big-billing brands from its recently acquired Golden Grain Macaroni Company to Chiat/Day, San Francisco. At the same time it is sending its Quaker Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice brands and a couple of new products to Geers, Gross Advertising in New York.

Both agencies are new to the Quaker fold, joining Jordan, Manning, Case, Taylor & McGrath, a Quaker agency since Sept. 1; J. Walter Thompson, Chicago; Backer & Spielvogel, New York, and Berry-Brown Advertising, Dallas.

The assignment going to Chiat/Day is for Rice-A-Roni and Noodle-Roni, which together billed $11.3 million in 1985, according to Leading National Advertisers, an independent media monitoring company.

Golden Grain is based in San Leandro, Calif., and its advertising needs were formerly supplied by Vantage Advertising and Marketing, an in-house operation. The Quaker products going to Geers, Gross were formerly at Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn, which lost them because of conflicts arising from the creation of the Omnicom Group.

The spokesman says: "Penn Mutual is building this arch like a good financial plan. Each piece is important — mutual funds, real estate, I.R.A.'s perhaps — but no financial plan is complete without the centerpiece, life insurance. With the right life insurance, your financial plan becomes a strong bridge to the future."

To further fix the company in the viewer's mind, the advertising will include a new sign-off, "Penn Mutual of Independence Square."

The commercial is very strong on name identification, since the agency is well aware that an industry survey has shown 66 percent of respondents who own life insurance said that a company's reputation was a major influence in purchasing insurance.

When the agency was competing for the account last year, Mr. Mabley remembers suggesting to Penn Mutual that "they get up the bucks and build consumer awareness."

The client took to that message eagerly since it has for the last two years been turning itself into a marketing company that looks to the consumer for new product ideas. For example, Karl Guerra, its vice president, chief marketing officer, is formerly of Pepsico, and he replaced Ronald Anderson, who had come from General Foods. And nobody has the strong marketing orientation of package-goods people.

The company, according to Mr. Mabley, has one million policyholders, acquired through a network of general agents. It also ranks among the top 2 percent of life insurance companies, with $24 billion in force and $4.3 billion in assets.

Mr. Mabley is particularly pleased with the arch in the commercial since he flunked out of the University of Pennsylvania architecture school and then went to Wabash College. Before he got into the agency game chairman of Young & Rubicam, which has been the largest single American agency and got there with the help of quite a number of acquisitions. He made his remarks in a speech yesterday to the San Francisco Advertising Club.

But none of his deals have been megas like the acquisition of Ted Bates Worldwide in August by Saatchi & Saatchi of London to create an operation billing $7.5 billion. That is the kind of mega he was talking about.

Echoing in part some of the comments by agency leaders in this column yesterday, Mr. Ney noted that the business community was both "astonished" and "critical" of the huge sums of money involved in these deals, leading to a feeling that if agencies are that valuable, then they must be charging their clients too much. He also said that at a time when clients were beginning to consider relaxing their conflict rules, the flap surrounding the mega-mergers could well cause a tightening instead.

"So these are not the finest days for the agency business," the soft-voiced Mr. Ney said. "The business is currently thought of as self-centered, bedazzled by gigantism, and very avaricious. Thanks a lot, brothers."

Y.& R.'s recent history includes the acquisition of the largest direct-marketing company, the largest health-care agency and the largest public relations firm. But, Mr. Ney would argue, these only added to his agency's ability to serve clients.

And that, after all, is the name of the game.

G.O.P. Seeks Senate Seat in Louisiana Saturday

By E. J. DIONNE Jr.

Special to The New York Times

MONROE, La., Sept. 24 — Representative W. Henson Moore wants voters to see the lever next to his name on the voting machine as a sword of righteousness.

Pull that Republican lever for the United States Senate on Saturday, Mr. Moore is telling voters all over Louisiana, and the sword will come down on years of corruption and a "Mediterranean" political system "that has brought dishonor on us all."

In a season when all Louisianans share the oppression of the still, hot air that contains enough humidity to water a desert, Republican politicians are flocking here in droves to share the suffering.

The reason is that under Louisiana's peculiar voting system, all candidates regardless of party appear on Saturday's primary ballot. There are 13 Democrats and one Republican, Mr. Moore. And if Mr. Moore gets 50 percent of the total vote cast for Senator in the first round, he is elected. There would be no November balloting. Otherwise, Mr. Moore, who is regarded as certain to come in first, would be forced into a Nov. 4 runoff against the candidate who finished second.

Edwards Impact on Race

His leading Democratic opponent, Representative John B. Breaux, is trying to prevent Mr. Moore's election Saturday by telling the people in the delta, the bayous and the factories that his opponent is nothing but a Republican trying to buy an election.

Associated Press

Vice President Bush with Representative W. Henson Moore at a rally yesterday in Shreveport, La., for Mr. Moore's Senate campaign.

But one name Mr. Breaux mentions as little as possible is that of Gov. Edwin W. Edwards, his political mentor, whose popularity is now lower than Richard M. Nixon's was at the depth of the Watergate scandal. According to an NBC News poll in Louisiana, Mr. Edwards receives a favorable rating from 22 percent of the state's residents. In 1974 a Gallup Poll conducted Aug. 2-5 shortly before President Nixon resigned reported that Mr. Nixon had a job-approval rating of 24 percent.

The back and forth over Mr. Edwards has made the Senate race here seem more like a campaign for Governor or Sheriff.

Twice indicted, but never convicted, Mr. Edwards is a politician for whom colorful is too pale a word. Though he once delighted voters here with his style, he is now being blamed for just about everything — including a state economy in shambles because of falling oil and gas prices. That is making it extremely difficult for Mr. Breaux, who wants to attribute the mess to the Republicans in Washington.

A victory for Mr. Moore would mean a pickup of one Senate seat by the Republicans, since Senator Russell B. Long, who is retiring, is a Democrat. That would make it all the harder for Democrats to achieve their major goal of the year, capturing a Senate majority. Republicans now hold a majority of 53 to 47.

With 13 Democrats on the ballot to pick off votes, many doubt that Mr. Moore can reach 50 percent.

But Edward F. Renwick, the director of Loyola University's Institute of Politics, the state's leading poll taker, gives Mr. Moore and even chance or even better of winning it all this weekend. "Moore's got the name recognition," he said. "He's got the momentum. He's got the money. And he's running against candidates who have none of these things."

The strength of the man who would be the first Republican Senator here since the Reconstruction days after the Civil War owes in part to the bad image of the national Democratic Party, seen as almost weirdly liberal in many parts of the state, notably here, in the Mississippi Delta region.

Disdain for Liberal Image

At a rally for Mr. Breaux at the American Legion Hall here Tuesday night, it was hard to find a white Democrat who had voted for Walter F. Mondale in 1984. And these were the party faithful.

The local Democrats live in fear of what well-financed Republican campaigns budgets will do to them.

"The national Republican money has painted us as a bunch of liberal jerks,' said State Representative William R. Sumlin, who has rallied to Mr. Breaux's banner. "We have to show that we're just as good Christians as they are; we raise the American flag just as often, we buy as many Chevrolets as they do."

But Mr. Breaux is a conservative Boll Weevil Democrat who could hardly be mistaken for Hubert H. Humphrey. Indeed, the one other Democrat with an outside chance of coming in second to Mr. Moore, the state Senate President, Samuel B. Nunez, paints himself as "the real Democrat" and Mr. Breaux as a pale imitation of Mr. Moore.

The real problem is that the collapse of the economy, tied with Mr. Edwards's flagrant, "let the good times roll" style has made Mr. Moore's theme — "the party's over" — unusually appealing.

Theme of Moral Revival

In a state whose politics is usually compared to its spicy gumbos and jambalayas, moral revival is an odd theme.

This is a place where Mr. Edwards won by a landslide telling voters that if his opponent won, things would get so bad "that there'll be nothing left for me to steal."

Representative John B. Breaux, a Democratic candidate for Senate from Louisiana, campaigning recently in Baton Rouge.

State Representative John J. Hainkel, the former House Speaker who shifted to the Republican Party last year, argues that voters turned against the old style — "What other state could corrupt hospitals?" is how he summarized it, referring to a hospital permits scandal — only because of the economy.

Interestingly, Mr. Breaux's response to this adversity is to sound increasingly like an old-style crusader for the common man Democrat. He condemns a Republican effort to purge the voting rolls as an effort to keep 40,000 blacks from casting ballots. "Black folks ain't going to put up with that," he told a cheering crowd here, "and white folks don't like it either."

And with Mr. Moore and the Republicans spending well over $3 million on television and negative mailings, Mr. Breaux gets some righteousness on his side.

"This is an election, not an auction," he says, and sounding a bit like Huey Long, he adds: "This Senate seat does not belong to the national Republican Party. It belongs to you, the people of Louisiana."

Some Democrats think Mr. Breaux may pick up enough from the reaction to Mr. Moore's hundreds of thousands of pieces of mail to force a runoff.

Reagan Stumps for 2 Gubernatorial Candidates in the Middle West

By GERALD M. BOYD

Special to The New York Times

OMAHA, Sept. 24 — Attempting to bolster the gubernatorial campaigns of a black man in Michigan and a white woman in Nebraska, President Reagan said today that the Republican Party was the "true party" of opportunity and "the party of all Americans."

Mr. Reagan came here in behalf of Kay Orr, the Nebraska State Treasurer, after two speeches in Michigan for William Lucas, the Wayne County Executive who is seeking to become the

Mr. Lucas, once a Democrat, switched to the Republican Party last year.

"Bill Lucas is a Republican — and Bill Lucas is black," Mr. Reagan said. "Nothing could more powerfully demonstrate that in 1986, it's not the Democrats but the G.O.P. that's become the party of progress and opportunity."

Mr. Reagan, who had flown to Detroit, the site of his 1980 Presidential nomination, was accompanied by Mrs. Orr.

Speaking at a $150-a-person fund-

his or her race or sex in an attempt to curry favor from this or that group," he said. "We are looking for leaders who share our ideals and have talent necessary to get the job done. Again, we Republicans are looking for the best candidate, period."

Focusing on the Michigan race, Mr. Reagan said that "no better symbol" of the realignment involving the Republican Party existed than in the state. In addition to Mr. Lucas, a woman, Collen Engler, is running on the Republican ticket for Lieutenant Governor.

certain that Bill Lucas is the next Governor of this state."

Mr. Lucas faces an uphill battle to capture the governorship from the incumbent Democrat, James J. Blanchard, with recent polls showing Mr. Lucas trailing by about 28 percentage points. Mr. Reagan's comments showed a willingness to focus on Mr. Lucas's race, which he has also emphasized in the hope of making inroads among traditionally black Democratic voters in Detroit.

State Republican strategists are hoping that Mr. Reagan's visit will help

The day of campaigning marked a departure from Mr. Reagan's current offensive, which has been directed at assuring Republican control of the Senate, and it was as symbolic as it was political.

The President was interrupted by demonstrators in both Detroit and Omaha, where he was heckled.

White House officials said that 31 Republican women and 36 Democratic women were running for House and Senate this year and that 80 black Republicans were seeking state and national offices.

'True Party of Opportunity'

"You see today," Mr. Reagan said, "we Republicans are demonstrating to the nation that the G.O.P. is the true party of opportunity, the party of all Americans — women and men, black and white — who believe that individual enterprise, not big government, is the true source of prosperity and freedom."

Recalling his orgins as an Irish-American who worked as a teen-age lifeguard in the small Illinois town of Dixon, he added:

"And believe me, there are plenty in the other party who find the fact that this Republican was born to ordinary working people — they find that kind of hard to take.

"I've always wondered why it is — the Democrats call supporters of the Republican Party fat cats, but their own contributors are called public-spirited philanthropists."

Mrs. Orr is opposed by Helen Boosalis, the former Mayor of Lincoln, in a race that is considered among the closest gubernatorial races in the country.

Mr. Reagan appeared at a $500-a-person fund-rasing reception for Mrs. Orr before delivering a speech that applauded her candidacy as indicative of the opportunity for women nationally and within the Republican Party.

Mr. Reagan said Mrs. Orr's campaign "has importance that extends beyond Nebraska itself to all parts of the nation." He added that, by electing her, "the people of this state will be sending a message to the rest of the nation and especially to the liberal leadership of the Democratic Party: Stop the taxing, stop the spending and make government live within its means."

"But there's another reason Kay's candidacy is so important," Mr. Reagan continued. "It stands for the virtually unlimited opportunity that our nation has come to offer men and women alike."

Mr. Reagan praised the candidacy of Mr. Lucas, formerly Wayne County sheriff and an agent with the Federal Bureau of Investigation, both here and in Detroit, as a demonstration of the current state of the Republican Party.

Hall in Detroit, the President said there was a distinction between the Republican and Democratic parties in how they were seeking to broaden their ranks.

"We don't choose someone based on strongly believe in the opportunity society to be personally involved in campaigns like this one here in Michigan," the President said. "I hope that between now and Election Day, you'll do everything in your power to make provide energy to Mr. Lucas's campaign by bolstering his standing among party regulars. Some party members have been troubled by the fact that his shift to the Republican Party came only recently.

McAuliffe Named a Trustee

CONCORD, N.H., Sept. 24 (UPI) — The husband of the teacher-astronaut Christa C. McAuliffe was named a state university trustee today, replacing the controversial nomination of Max Hugel, a race track owner. Gov. John H. Sununu's selection of Steven McAuliffe, a lawyer, was unanimously approved by the Executive Council.

Campaign in Textile Belt Focusing on Trade

By ROBIN TONER

Special to The New York Times

GREENSBORO, N.C., Sept. 19 — Here in textile country, the nation's trade policy is not a matter of philosophical debate. It is widely viewed as a simple question of jobs.

Imports are discussed in very personal terms in the sprawling mills and plants that provide a livelihood to more than 200,000 North Carolinians. "They're flooding us to death with imports," said Deborah Saunders, who has worked in the textile industry for 10 years. "I believe we all worry."

In North Carolina and in other areas where imports are viewed as a threat to jobs, the Reagan Administration's trade policies have emerged as a major issue this election year. What is unclear is whether voters will hold Republican candidates accountable for President Reagan's policies on Election Day.

Democrats have assailed the Administration's trade policies around the country in recent months, but perhaps nowhere is the issue more focused than here in the textile belt. North Carolina has lost one out of five textile jobs in the last 10 years, state officials said, and imports are blamed for many of the plant closings.

Frustration and Anger

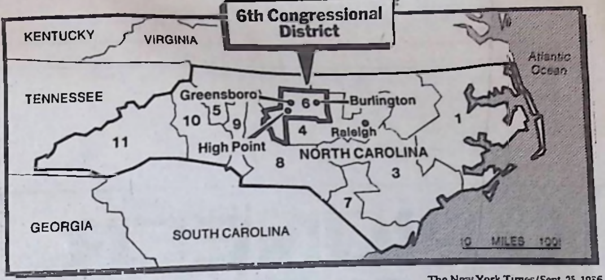
Workers speak with deep frustration, and not a little anger, about the President's position on textile imports and his opposition to a law that would have limited them.

"I wish they would give me one hour with my President, so I could just get this off my chest," said Peggy Kernodle, a weaver at a Burlington Industries plant. Lindsey Snyder, a technician at Cone Mills who voted for Mr. Reagan, said softly, "I was hoping he'd do something to help us, one way or the other."

Two trends have appeared in North Carolina's textile communities that are common in economically troubled areas in this election year. While Democrats attribute those economic woes to national Republican policies, Republican candidates are strenuously disavowing those policies and assiduously appealing to local concerns.

Kevin Phillips, the Republican analyst, said it was difficult to find "free traders" on the campaign trail this year. "It's awfully hard for someone to run around saying 'free trade works' when you're closing in on a $170 billion trade deficit," Mr. Phillips said.

The North Carolina Democratic Party has been campaigning at textile mills for a year now, and its message is direct. "There's only one way to stop textile and apparel plant closings — Vote Democratic," one leaflet reads. Many textile workers are conservative Democrats who have increasingly voted Republican in recent years.



The New York Times/Sept. 25, 1986

Sixth Congressional District, a textile area, is politically volatile.

Democratic strategists view foreign imports as the kind of pocketbook issue that can bring these voters back.

The trade issue was further highlighted by the dramatic saga of a bill that would have set strict limits on textile imports. The textile industry lobbied hard for the legislation, but the President vetoed it last December. Supporters came back last month and pushed for overriding that veto, but the effort fell just 8 votes short of the necessary two-thirds majority in the House. The White House continued its aggressive opposition to the bill, which the President denounced as dangerously protectionist.

The outcome stirred strong emotions among many residents in the region. Dewey L. Trogdon, chairman of the Cone Mills Corporation, which is based in Greensboro, sent a memorandum to his employees a few days after the vote in the House. "President Reagan and his Cabinet members dishonored themselves by their use of raw political power against American apparel and textile employees," declared Mr. Trogdon, who had twice voted for the President.

Volatile State District

Translating such anger into partisan terms this November is not a simple matter for North Carolina voters. The President is not on the ballot, and all the Republican House members from North Carolina supported the textile legislation. So did Senator James T. Broyhill, a Republican running against former Governor Terry Sanford in the Senate race this fall.

Democrats argue that if Republican House members were truly effective, they could have swayed the White House on the textile bill, or at least enough members of their party to override the veto.

Such is the debate here in the Sixth Congressional District, which includes the textile-producing centers of Burlington and Greensboro. It is a volatile district that has switched Congressmen three times in the last three elections. At present it is represented by a Republican, Howard Coble, who is being challenged by Robin Britt, a Democrat. Two years ago, the situation was reversed: Mr. Britt was the incumbent and Mr. Coble the challenger.

Mr. Coble's campaign literature highlights his work in behalf of the textile bill, although it also includes a picture of the Congressman with the President. "What Mr. Coble says is that the President's just been getting bad advice on this one issue," said Edward McDonald, press secretary for the Coble campaign. "People in the White House are constantly yelling free trade. We yell back, 'Fair trade.' "

What Mr. Coble's strategists hope for is the kind of attitude expressed by Lindsey Snyder, who has worked in the textile industry for 18 years. Mr. Snyder said he was "very disappointed" in the failure of the textile bill, "and I voiced my opinion to Howard Coble himself." But Mr. Snyder said he believed Mr. Coble "did what he could do" and says he plans to vote for him this November.

Against such thinking, the Britt campaign argues that Mr. Coble was not "tough enough" in his efforts for the bill. But Democrats are also counting on a broader trend in this district, according to Mark P. Longabaugh, manager of Mr. Britt's campaign.

Mr. Longabaugh said he viewed the Administration's handling of the import issue as the kind of "economic elitism" that frustrates Republican realignment in the South, and particularly in this district. He argues that many workers feel "betrayed" by the President, who carried this district with 65 percent of the vote in 1984.

In the meantime, Peggy Kernodle, who is 29 years old, said she has gone back to school because she worries about the future of her industry.

"I love weaving," she said. "I'm good at it, and I've been doing it for 13 years. But down the road, I don't really think I have a future in textiles unless the Government does something."

Officials Say Aspin Legally Inquired About His Brother's Military Contract

By MARTIN TOLCHIN

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24 — The chairman of the House Armed Services Committee has approached both Pentagon and New York State officials in behalf of his brother, a military contractor, according to Federal and state officials.

The committee chairman, Representative Les Aspin, said that his actions were intended merely to satisfy what he called his "curiosity factor" concerning the possible loss of his brother's contracts, including one that expires Sept. 30.

He added that he had no desire to exert influence in behalf of his brother, James O. Aspin, president of Air Vectors Associates, based close to Stewart Airport outside Newburgh, N.Y.

Military officials said that Representative Aspin, a Wisconsin Democrat, received no favorable treatment, that his action was neither illegal nor inappropriate, and that Congressmen often approached Federal agencies in behalf of constituents.

Edward Biddle, deputy director of the Defense Fuel Supply Center, which awarded and monitors the contract, said of the Congressman's action, "We're all aware that it could create the appearance of impropriety, but no favoritism was involved. We didn't even know that the contractor was the Congressman's brother when the contract was awarded."

But Mr. Aspin, as chairman of a key Congressional committee dealing with military contracting, is in a particularly sensitive position. And his action, which served to alert officials involved in the contract that James Aspin was his brother, sheds light on how political positions are used in Washington.

Last October, 10 months after the Congressman's election as chairman of the Armed Services panel, Air Vectors was awarded a $2.5 million contract to provide fuel for the huge C-5A cargo planes maintained by the New York Air National Guard at Stewart.

The one-year military contract is the only one the company has, James Aspin said. It expires Sept. 30, and the company's request for renewal has focused attention on its financial troubles, on its dependence on the Government contract and its occasional failure to fulfill its part.

The company, which has a history of financial trouble, filed for protection under Chapter 11 of the United States Bankruptcy Code on June 7, 1982. It was discharged from bankruptcy last July, although still $2 million in debt. The discharge is being appealed by the New York State Department of Transportation.

Contract Required Fuel Whenever Needed

Pentagon officials said that they were precluded by law from discriminating against a bankrupt contractor. "We are not permitted to consider bankruptcy proceedings in awarding a contract," said Don Peters, a spokesman for the Defense Fuel Supply Center. The only criterion, according to Mr. Peters, is a contractor's ability to carry out a contract's provisions.

The contract calls for the company to provide fuel whenever needed, and the average has been three times a week, according to military officials. However, on three occasions Air Vectors failed to provide fuel promptly. On two of those the military purchased the fuel from commercial suppliers at a higher price, Defense Department officials said. On the third occasion Air Vectors provided the fuel after a delay of several hours.

Mr. Aspin's first intervention in the company's behalf came in 1984, when he went to Albany to meet with Alfred B. DelBello, then Lieutenant Governor, and other state officials. Mr. DelBello recalled that the Congressman was trying to persuade state officials not to remove his brother's company from another job, as overall operator of Stewart Airport.

"Les Aspin had contacted us to come in and talk about his brother's contract," Mr. DelBello said. "He came into my office and talked to me and my staff. We referred the matter to Jim LaRocca." Mr. LaRocca is the State Commissioner of Transportation.

Representative Aspin said that he had only a vague recollection of the meeting. Air Vectors lost the airport operation contract.

Last November, the Congressman said, he asked a committee aide to check on whether that loss would jeopardize the C-5A contract. The Congressman, who said he had no financial interest in the company and who is not listed as a partner, said that he had forgotten who the aide was or whom the aide spoke to.

Officials of the Defense Fuel Supply Center, said they were approached last November by an aide to the Congressman.

The Congressional aide approached David Calloway, administrator of the contract, and asked him the status of the Air Vectors contract.

"It was intervention, but it was not inappropriate," said Edward Biddle, deputy director of the defense fuel agency. "We've had many contacts from Congressional offices in behalf of constituents.

"We told him to call the contractor," James Aspin, Mr. Biddle said.

The call served to put the Defense Department on notice that James Aspin's brother was chairman of the House Armed Services committee. "Nobody here even knew that Les Aspin was the brother of Jim Aspin until this contract period," Mr. Biddle said.

The Congressman said, "I wanted to know, if my brother lost the lease at Stewart, would he also lose the C-5A contract? The answer was no."

Representative Les Aspin

'It Was Out of His Own Curiosity That He Called'

"He was in this business before I became chairman of the Armed Services Committee," the Congressman said. "I am not involved in this thing, except the curiosity factor."

James Aspin said that he never sought to use his brother to influence the Government's awarding of contracts. "I never tried to make it known that I was Les's brother," James Aspin said. He added, however, "I kept him abreast of this thing. It was out of his own curiosity that he called."

In Washington a request by a member of Congress for a status report on a contract is often interpreted as an indication of his desire that the contract be expedited. Mr. Aspin has served on the Armed Services Committee since his election to the House in 1970. He was elected chairman in January 1985. Initially an acerbic critic of the Pentagon, he has tempered his views in recent years and was a major supporter of the MX missile system.

Air Vectors operates out of a small building outside Stewart Airport. But as a result of losing the overall airport contract, it has no fuel storage tanks or trucks, and its role is, therefore, one of a middleman. Air Vectors purchases gasoline from the oil companies, mostly BP and Sun Oil, James Aspin said, and subcontractors perform the actual fueling.

Air Vectors lost the overall contract for managing the airport because, in the opinion of the State Department of Transportation, which owns the field, its operation failed to meet standards of safety, maintenance and repair.

"People were being injured, equipment was damaged and unsafe practices were followed," said James P. McGuinness, the department's airport director.

James Aspin believes that the state was "nitpicking," and attributes his financial problems to a state "vendetta" against him. "I don't know what the Department of Transportation has against us," he said.

But Jeremiah Berk, a Federal bankruptcy judge, upheld the state's assertions in a 59-page opinion that denied Mr. Aspin's efforts to overturn his ouster. "Perhaps the debtor's most serious performance failure under the lease presented by the evidence at trial has been its inability to provide services in a safe manner," the judge ruled.

Military Officials Cite No Complaints

Nevertheless, military officials said they were satisfied with the company's performance. "We had a contract with Air Vectors for six years, and we never had a complaint from any customer," said Mr. Biddle of the Defense Fuel Supply Center.

Similarly, Lieut. Col. John E. Perez, commander of base services for the 105th Air Group of the New York State Air National Guard, said, "Our experience has been that Air Vectors is no better or worse than any other company we've dealt with."

Brig. Gen. Dominick C. Marchesiello, assistant adjutant general for air of the New York Air National Guard, said, "The 105th has never complained to this headquarters about Air Vectors."

Air Vectors Associates first obtained a military contract in 1978, when the company also became the fixed base operator at Stewart Airport. The company, the sole bidder on an advertised contract, supplied 300,000 gallons to fuel O-2 surveillance planes.

In 1982 the 105th moved to Stewart from Westchester County Airport.

"We looked forward to the Guard's move here, and did everything we could to encourage it," James Aspin said.

In July 1985 the 105th obtained three C-5A's, and two months later Air Vectors obtained a contract to supply 2.65 million gallons of jet fuel at 91 cents a gallon and 101,000 gallons of aviation gas at $1.036 cents a gallon.

Pentagon officials said that the cost was less than they paid other contractors.

Air Vectors Associates filed for bankruptcy in June, 1982, and was released from its Chapter 11 status last July, primarily because the creditors stopped pressing for payment, according to James Aspin. "Nobody's coming after me," he said.

The New York State Department of Transportation is appealing the judge's ruling because the company continues to owe creditors $2 million.

In court papers, Air Vectors attributed its financial woes to several factors, including, in 1982, "the continuing recession in the United States and its spreading effects on the entire world economy," as well as "rapidly escalating" costs of equipment repair and maintenance.

Judge Lists Range Of Unsafe Practices

The company said other factors included its undertaking new clients in December 1981, when the Eastern Seaboard suffered "the worst winter it had experienced in a decade." In addition, the company suffered a strike by the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, which, although unsuccessful, led to a ruling by the National Labor Relations Board that the company had engaged in unfair labor practices.

Judge Berk, in a ruling in September, 1985, listed the company's defects as operator of Stewart Airport, sustaining the state's decision to oust Air Vectors as operator. That role has now been assumed by Butler Aviation.

"The list of A.V.A.'s unsafe practices both concerning its fueling operations and its procedures in general is extensive," the judge said in his opinion.

These included having refueling vehicles hooked up to aircraft with no personnel present; spray painting an automobile inside a hangar, which "created a respiratory and fire safety problem"; the "unsafe handling" of a forklift vehicle, causing a toxic chemical spill of insecticide; unsafe fueling practices, including failure to ground the fueling apparatus; operating a fuel truck without headlights and using other fuel vehicles with only one functioning headlight, and driving fuel trucks at "unsafe speeds."

Judge Berk also cited the company's "woefully deficient" efforts to maintain clean facilities. Problems included dirty restrooms, overflowing garbage cans, oil and water on hangar floors and barrels of uncapped lubrication oil, with oily rags lying on top of them.

The judge also said that the company had failed to provide adequate repair and preventative maintenance and cited "a fairly substantial leak" in a hangar, unoperational restrooms and missing weatherstripping.

Finally, the judge said that the company had failed to provide "prompt service" to its clients.

The company, meanwhile, produced several notices of praise, including a letter from the Federal Aviation Administration commending it for its repair of an airplane belonging to an inspector and a certificate of appreciation from an officer of the West Point Military Academy for the company's assistance in organizing an airlift of the institution's cadets.

House Liability Insurance Bill

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24 (AP) — Under pressure of rapidly rising liability insurance costs, the House on Tuesday approved an expansion of the rights of business, government and professional organizations to save money by forming groups for self-insurance or to buy insurance.

The bill, similar to one already approved by the Senate, won approval on a voice vote. It would pre-empt state laws barring businesses and others from forming such groups.

Differences must now be resolved between the House bill and the version passed by the Senate, where more sweeping legislation to overhaul the product liability insurance system is being debated.

The House plan amends a 1981 law that allows such groups to band together to buy product liability insurance or to insure themselves against product liability risks. The new version would expand that authority to include all forms of liability insurance.

Meanwhile, the Senate, 96 to 0, defeated a move to kill its package to overhaul product liability laws, and Senator Bob Kasten, Republican of Wisconsin, filed a motion to shut off debate.

pected from the proposed changes in Federal tax returns. According to figures released yesterday by State Comptroller Regan, a Republican, total Federal taxes paid by New Yorkers will decline by 2.4 percent, less than had been expected and less than the average decrease nationwide of 6.1 percent.

¶For 1987, when the Federal tax plan would begin to be phased in, New York City residents would actually pay more in Federal taxes — a total increase of $179 million — according to the State Comptroller. That is because the city has a disproportionate number of single taxpayers and higher-income taxpayers, who would not fare as well as others under the tax revision. In 1988, when the Federal plan would be fully in effect, the total amount paid by city residents would decrease slightly from current levels.

¶Fiscal experts examining state tax revision say they are being hampered by uncertainty over the direction of the country's economy and over how taxpayers will react to the new Federal plan: Will the sales of stock increase or decrease? Will real-estate transactions rise or fall? As a guide, investment houses are being surveyed by the Governor's advisers for what advice they are offering their clients.

¶Further complicating the issue, Governor Cuomo now says he wants to link any tax plan to putting a limit on yearly increases in the state budget, a proposal previously rejected by the Legislature. "We can't limit discussion income (the top rate on earned income will be 13 percent next year); lowering the state's 4 percent sales tax, and continuing some preferential treatment for capital gains.

As examples, Comptroller Regan pointed out yesterday that the state's extra tax revenues, which he put at $1.9 billion, could be eliminated by reducing the sales tax to 2.4 percent or by cutting personal income tax rates 14 percent across the board.

Although state residents will not save as much money on their revised Federal returns as had been expected, none of the state tax planners suggested that New York should take any action to compensate taxpayers for that. Instead, they are focusing only on how to return the excess state taxes to New Yorkers.

The Governor says he wants to return the exact amount of the excess. But he is talking in aggregate terms, not necessarily meaning that every individual resident will pay the same in taxes. And therein lies the debate over who should get the excess in capital gains taxes.

Capital gains — the profit made from the sale of investments such as stocks held for more than a year — are currently taxed by the Federal Government at a maximum effective rate of 20 percent, far lower than the maximum 50 per cent rate for most other income. The Federal plan would eliminate that favorable treatment. Since the state tax returns are based on the Federal returns, the state would automatically do likewise — unless it took other action.

U.S. Study on Adult Literacy Finds the Results Are Mixed

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24 — Ninety-five out of a hundred young adults can read as well as the average fourth-grader, the level educators call basic literacy, a national survey has found. But the literacy skills of many of them are extremely limited, the independent testing experts who conducted the survey said today.

Education Secretary William J. Bennett, who commissioned the study, hailed it as "the most comprehensive of its kind ever undertaken,"

He said it proved that "the United States is not awash in illiteracy." As a group, young adults may be more literate than ever before in the nation's history, he said.

But, he added, the survey found that "four out of five young adults cannot satisfactorily perform such elemental tasks as using a bus schedule to select correct departures and arrivals."

"Among minority group members, the figures are even worse," Mr. Bennett added. "Fewer than 10 percent of young black and Hispanic adults are able to perform tasks of this complexity."

Over all, the study by the National Assessment of Educational Progress found that 20 percent of young adults could not perform beyond the eighth-grade level.

"These results tell us we have elevated most of our young adult population above absolute illiteracy," said Archie E. Lapointe, executive director of the National Assessment of Educational Progress, a research project mandated by Congress to collect data on the learning performances of young Americans. But he added that "millions of people need help" and that "unless something is done, the situation will get worse instead of better."

"The nation's leadership must answer the question whether this is a cup half-empty or a cup half-full," said Mr. Lapointe, referring to the study's mixed conclusions.

Mr. Lapointe said that the survey found "unacceptable ethnic discrepancies," with blacks overall testing far below whites, and the Hispanic people in between.

In addition, 2 percent of those approached to take the test were deemed incapable because it would "unduly frustrate or embarrass them," half of them because they could not speak English, the study said.

The $2 million study was conducted by the nonprofit Educational Testing Service, which holds the current contract for national assessment.

It did not compare illiteracy rates with other periods in American history or with the rates in other countries, nor did it aim to identify a particular illiteracy rate for the segment of the population that it studied. Rather, it focused on the ability of its 3,600 subjects, 21 to 25 years old, who were examined for 90 minutes each in their homes. They were asked to perform a variety of tasks requiring increasing levels of comprehension and sophistication. Those tested were said to be representative of all 21 million Americans in their age range.

These tasks were broken down into three areas:

¶Prose literacy — reading and interpreting prose, such as news reports, books and magazines. The report said that the most demanding prose tasks were accomplished by "less than one in 100 blacks, only about three in 100 Hispanic, and only 11 in 100 white young adults."

¶Document literacy — using information in documents such as charts, maps and tables. According to the report, the most challenging tasks involving information-processing from documents were accomplished by 25 in 100 white, seven in 100 Hispanic, and three in 100 black young adults.

¶Quantitative literacy — performing mathematical operations required for such tasks as figuring the cost of a meal from a menu or balancing a checkbook. At the higher levels on this scale, there were relatively few young adults from any group performing well. The study said one in 100 black, four in 100 Hispanic, and 12 in 100 white young adults could perform the most complex common tasks. Moreover, the study said, "only 20 in 100 young adults with postsecondary degrees are estimated to be at or above this level."

For prose skills, almost all those tested could describe a job that they would like, but less than 40 percent could understand a somewhat difficult newspaper article and less than 10 percent could interpret a four-line poem.

For ability to handle documents, all those tested could find the time of an upcoming meeting on a memorandum, but less than 60 percent could read a paragraph and only 20 percent could effectively deal with a bus schedule.

In quantitative skills, more than 90 percent could balance a checkbook, but less than 40 percent could calculate change they would be due when ordering a simple meal from a menu and less than 10 percent could properly fill out a catalogue order form, according to the survey.

The authors of the report were Irwin S. Kirsch and Ann Jungeblut.

Henry P. deVries, a Lawyer And Professor at Columbia

Henry P. deVries, a lawyer and professor emeritus at the Columbia Law School, died Tuesday at his office in Manhattan. He was 75 years old and lived in Manhattan and in Fairfield, Conn.

Mr. deVries, an international law specialist, was a partner in the law firm of Baker & McKenzie and occasionally served as a legal consultant to foreign governments.

For his work in that capacity for the Netherlands Ministry of Finance from 1946 to 1865, the Royal Dutch Government designated him as a Knight Commander of Orange-Nassau.

Mr. deVries, who was born in Curaçao, graduated from Columbia College in 1934 and Columbia Law School in 1937. During World War II, he served as an Army lieutenant, assigned to the Office of Strategic Services. He joined the Columbia faculty in 1948 and was associate director of the Parker School of Foreign and Comparative Law at Columbia from 1952 to 1980. He was also the director of the university's Inter-American Law Center.

He is survived by his wife, Kathleen Costigan deVries; two daughters, Diane Ashley of Brooklyn and Suzanne deVries of Manhattan; three sisters: Marie Dussenbroke of Port Charlotte, Fla., and Emma Gazitua and Josephina Bakker, both of Madrid, and a grandson.

ELIZABETH RIEFSTAHL

Elizabeth Riefstahl, an Egyptologist and author who helped build the Brooklyn Museum's library of Egyptology to international recognition, died Sept. 15 at Providence Hospital in Southfield, Mich. She was 97 years old.

The author of many magazine articles, book reviews and monographs on Egyptian art and culture, Mrs. Riefstahl was best known for her book "Thebes in the Time of Amunhotep III," a study of life in 13th-century B.C. Egypt.

A native of Butler, Pa., Mrs. Riefstahl became the librarian of the Brooklyn Museum's Wilbour Library of Egyptology in 1936. She became associate curator of Egyptology in 1947 and retired with that rank in 1956. For many years after her retirement, she served as editor of Brooklyn Museum publications on ancient art.

She is survived by a son, Rudolf Riefstahl 2d of Ferndale, Mich., three grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

HEINZ ALBERT PINNER

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 24 (AP) — Heinz Albert Pinner, a lawyer who fled Nazi Germany and helped win restitution for Hitler's victims, died here of cancer on Sept. 17. He was 93 years old.

For his work on behalf of victims of the Nazis, the West German Government awarded Mr. Pinner the Grand Cross of the Order of Merit last year.

Mr. Pinner was a cavalry officer on the Western front in World War I. He later practiced corporate and economic law in Berlin until 1938, when the Nazis denied him the right to practice law. He and his family fled the country in 1939 and settled in Los Angeles, where he became an accountant.

In 1945 Mr. Pinner became an American citizen and returned to Germany, where he won accreditation from the courts and was one of the few German-born lawyers permitted to seek restitution from the new Government for survivors of Nazi persecution.

He is survived by his wife, Ilse, and two sons.

LOUISE BUSHNELL

Louise Bushnell, a retired executive and volunteer worker, died of amyotrophic lateral sclerosis Monday at her home in Manhattan. She was 77 years old.

Mrs. Bushnell was a member of the alumnae board of directors of the Spence School and had done volunteer work for the American Red Cross until a few months ago. During World War II, she served in the Office of Strategic Services, where her assignments included one as secretary to its first director, Gen. William J. Donovan.

After the war, Mrs. Bushnell worked for Condé Nast Publications, the American Cancer Society and the National Association of Manufacturers.

Mrs. Bushnell is survived by a son, Allerton Cushman Jr. of Manhattan; a daughter, Tudor Cushman of Boise, Idaho; a sister, Winthrop B. Palmer of Oyster Bay, L.I., and four grandchildren.

Some of the main architects of a revised state tax code will come together for a public discussion today at a Manhattan breakfast sponsored by the Association for a Better New York, an organization of business executives and real-estate developers. The Governor will use the forum to reassure the business community that he will act quickly and fairly on state taxes.

'Can't Wait Forever'

Mr. Cuomo said in the interview that he wanted recommendations from his advisory group in time to include them in his State of the State and budget messages, which are delivered in January. "We can give them some more time," he said, "but they can't study it forever and I can't wait forever."

In interviews with the Governor's advisory group — which includes investment bankers, union leaders, a clergyman and state officials — it was clear that no consensus has emerged on a plan. The options include lowering the state's personal income tax, whose maximum rate on earned income will be 9 percent next year; closing the gap between rates on earned and unearned questions,'' Mr. Rohatyn said. "People with capital are very movable. They can get up and move to another state. We have had a resumption in a much more quiet way of a corporate exodus from New York City. This is something we have to be very careful of."

But Bishop Joseph M. Sullivan, the vicar for human services of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Brooklyn, who is a member of the Governor's advisory panel, said that "just as much as this raises questions about what to do for the wealthy, from my point of view it is at least — if not more — important that we try to see how we can free some of the working poor from paying taxes."

Comptroller Regan said he "would sleep better" if the tax code were revised by simply returning to each group of taxpayers the exact amount of the increase that came from that group — for example, returning 50 percent of the total increase to those with capital gains, who make up that 50 percent increase.

But the Governor's Director of the Budget, R. Wayne Diesel, said that, mechanically, doing so was more difficult than it sounded and that "in terms of social policy," it might not be "the way we want to go."

Bid for Money Begins in Plan To Keep Rebuilding Subways

By JAMES BROOKE

Seeking to continue rebuilding the subways, transit officials have begun a campaign to win financing this fall for the Metropolitan Transportation Authority's $8.3 billion, five-year proposed capital program.

The capital program calls for spending for 200 new and 2,731 overhauled subway cars, for 920 new buses and for modernizing the subway stations at Times Square, Herald Square and Grand Central Terminal. The program is expected to be approved tomorrow by the Board of the Metropolitan Transportation Authority.

Financing for 60 percent of the program is already guaranteed, according to Robert R. Kiley, chairman of the M.T.A.

The remaining $3.4 billion is subject to approval this fall by the State Legislature.

Campaign for Political Support

"I'll be on the rubber chicken circuit pretty vigorously," Mr. Kiley said of his campaign to win political support for the plan.

The political battle is expected to be fierce.

"The problem is that everyone wants the capital program to continue, but there is a serious question whether the M.T.A. can effectively spend the kind of money they are asking for," Assemblyman Arthur J. Kremer, Democrat of Long Beach, L.I., and chairman of the Assembly Ways and Means Committee said yesterday.

"What they want and what they get will not be the same," Mr. Kremer said. The Assemblyman is also a member of the Capital Review Board, which is to start studying the program next week.

Alternatives for Financing

In mid-November, another group, the Governor's Council on Fiscal and Economic Priorities, is to issue a report listing financing alternatives.

"We show a shortage of $2.7 billion," Felix G. Rohatyn, chairman of the panel, said yesterday. "It looks reasonable, but $3 billion is a lot of money."

One source of new money could be service-contract bonds. The bonds would be issued by the M.T.A. and backed by contracts with the state, Assemblyman G. Oliver Koppell, a Bronx Democrat, said yesterday. The M.T.A. would sell the bonds and the state would set aside a fixed amount of money each year to cover interest and principal obligations to those holding bonds.

The M.T.A. capital program will be reviewed by the Corporations, Public Authorities and Commissions Committee, of which Mr. Koppell is chairman. Mr. Koppell held three hearings on the capital program last May.

"Generally, I am pleased with what has happened and with the outlines of the new five-year plan," Mr. Koppell said.

The plan proposes spending $6.48 billion on the subways, $1.03 billion on the Long Island Rail Road and $749 million on the Metro-North Commuter Railroad.

Last Week, They All Agreed On A Single # Issue.

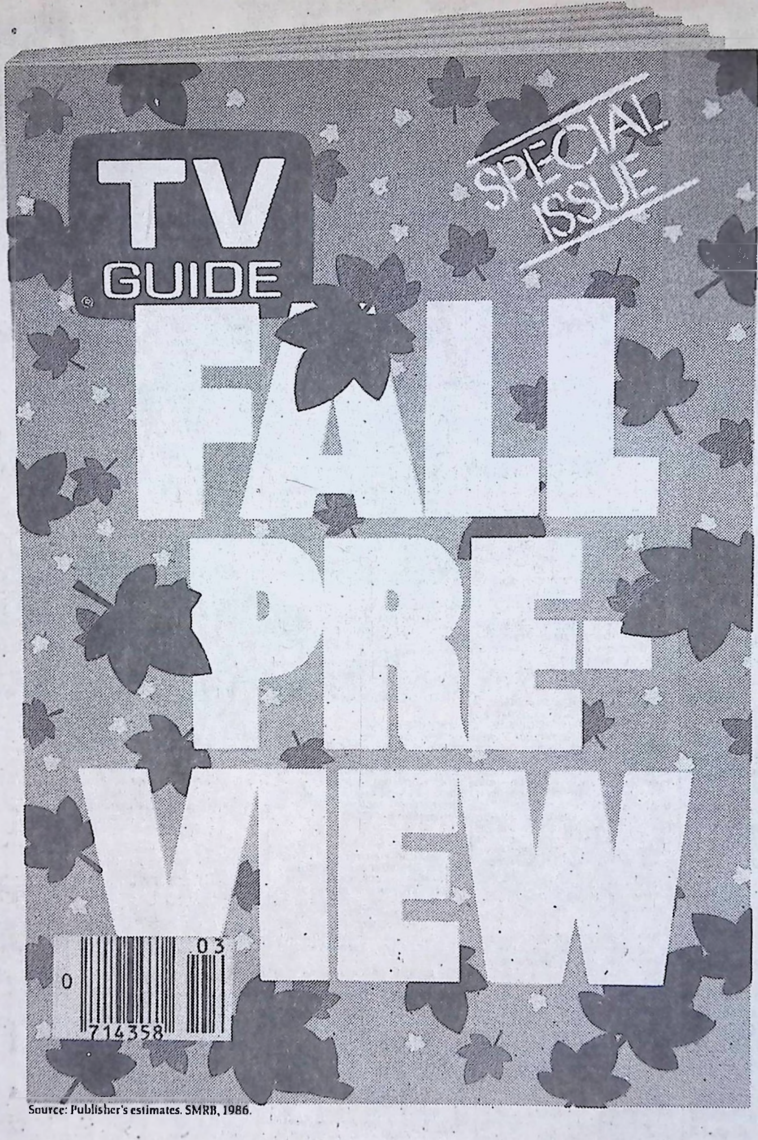
Again this year, the Fall Preview issue of TV Guide was a blockbuster. Selling more copies than any single issue of any other magazine in America, 18,466,000.

Over 2 million copies more than the rate base.

A bonus of 4.8 million adult readers.

That's power advertisers can agree on any day. And a total of 471 national, regional and local advertisers made the '86 Fall Preview the most successful ever.



Source: Publisher's estimates. SMRB, 1986.

Ad revenues rose 12%, to a record $12,489,257.

The Fall Preview issue may be a once-a-year opportunity, but, in fact, every week TV Guide does what no other magazine can. Puts your ad before over 40 million adult readers. And with a cost efficiency that's particularly attractive in these tight-budget times.

TV Guide. Where the issue is clout.
