Art in the Theatre

Many people confuse imagination with ingenuity, with inventiveness. But imagination is not this thing at all. It is the peculiar power of seeing with the eye of the mind. And it is the very essence of the theatre.

The true dramatic attitude, the mood, indeed, in which all great art is created, is one of intense awareness, of infectious excitement. If we are to create in the theatre, we must first learn to put on this creative invention like the mantle of rainbow feathers. We must learn to feel the drive and beat of the dramatic imagination in its home. We must take the little gift we have into the hall of the gods.

Keep in your souls some images of magnificence.

ROBERT EDMOND JONES,
The Dramatic Imagination
